Demented Otaku Lolicon Board Will be come back in the spring, but not on the internet....No if you want to access the Anime Board your going to have to get a ham licence. Demented Otaku Lolicon board will be on 20 Meter come spring. Since I am unable to put on the internet, then I'll put it on packet!! Demented Otaku Lolicon Site was shut down after someone complainted about it and since that time I have been unable to find a spot on the web for it. So the best thing to do is put it on packet, no one will be able to complain about it on there. I have a spare HF lying around and I'll just put it on packet HAHAHAHAHAHAHA

Like spend it telling me how much you are not going to reply to me instead? I fail to see what the difference is. Maybe you could enlighten me?

Bill, this is the first Robesin reply in years where he did not forge the attributes to read "snot-scam-and sleaze..." Robesin is trying to win you over by playing nice this time. Unfortunately, the rest of us know his game.

Robesin is right? When???

Robesin attacks when I reposted an article taken directly from the ARRL web site quoting an ARRL Vice President >in its entirety< stating that amateurs have an overblown sense of self-importance.

> One of Brain's favorite tactics is to take comments out-of-context > and then try to represent them as the entire "gist" of the comments.

One of Robesin's favorite tactics is to make homosexual inuendo or claims of pedophilia when he encounters someone who disagrees with him.

> My "MARS >>>IS<<< AMATEUR RADIO" comment refered to the fact that > the MARS program was staffed almost entirely by Amateur Radio licensees > and was in the very spirit of what it means to be an Amateur Radio > licensee...

I pointed out that MARS absolutely has non-amateur leadership, non-amateur participants, and an entirely non-amateur mission. Hell, Robesin claims to have been chopped to an NMC MARS slot on Okinawa - as an active duty, non-amateur participant. Yet he continues with his "Sorry Hans, MARS >>>IS<<< Amateur Radio" nonsense. Didn't even know what the MOD was. He tried pulling this stunt before he realized that I had MARS experience.

> He doesn't want to repeat THAT part since it wouldn't serve
> his purposes. (to try and embarrass me)

Except that I was an actual MARS affiliate and knew what I was talking about. You didn't. Still don't.

> He also claims that I am repsonsible for the "excrement eating"

> SOLELY RESPONSIBLE for the authorship of those subject lines and use of Sorry Robesin, but you are the one who posted the "excrement eating" filth, and keep reposting your quote. Unbelievable, but Google provides.

> Brain, of course, has NEVER owned up to any one of his own
> misrepresentatiuons of Amateur Radio.

I have opinions but Robesin doesn't allow dissenting opinions. Opinions that differ from his are "LIES."

> He has made ludicrous claims > that have failed to meet any statndard of proof or substance, including > any one of several claims of having been a DX station,

David Heil/K8MN has me confirmed at least twice. Robesin knows this, therefore Robesin lies.

> misrepresentations about MARS, RACES, ARES, and other poorly > conceptualized opinions that have fallen by the wayside as failing the > test of evidence.

After it was obvious from one regular on RRAP that his ARES group was unable to fully support an upcoming American Red Cross exercise, Robesin was asked to write a duty schedule for the exercise. The stated requirements were three 3 operators on duty per shift. He shorted the 1st eight hours of the exercise by all three personnel. He claims it was covered, but the supported agency was not supported at all. The subsequent shifts were shorted from one to two operators per shift. Robesin claims that ARES can support all agency needs even when they lack enough volunteers. Amateur Operators can perform Super-Human feats, OR the ARC is just an 8AM - 5PM agency.

> Everyone's entitled to their opinions.

Not true. Hot-ham is not entitled to an opinion, if Robesin has anything to say about it.

> Brain's opinions of me are > obviously low as he, despite having allegedly been a veteran himself, > are anti-veteran and anti-volunteer.

My opinions of Robesin are spot on.

In addition to slinging accusations of homosexual and pedophilia at those who disagree with him, I am now a veteran-hater and a volunteer-hater. Nevermind that I am a veteran and a volunteer.

Robesin has claimed that he can have me picked up on his say so as an LPN with a simple phone call from Tennessee. To another poster on RRAP, he claimed that "People who shoot off their mouths can have their tires slashed, rocks thrown through windows, and wives terrorized," but later clarified that all those bad things would be at someone else's hands.

A well known Amateur Radio store advertising in QST, whose ham daughter was featured in the ad photo, was said to be "selling something" but not amateur equipment.

Robesin, whose father was a Sailor Army Recruiter (I swear thats not a typo), lays claim to seven hostile actions in the USMC, but who's only overseas assignment was Okinawa.

There's more, much more, but if I went on and on and on you'd probably think I was making it up. I'm not. Google provides.

> I've rubbed his nose in one > failed opinion after another.

Yet it is your excrement on another man's genitals, according to your own original claims and subsequent quotes. Google provides, and you've requoted yourself numerous times.

Your $0.02 isn't worth two cents. Google provides.

Of course let us not leave Mark out of the insanity. Mark will continue to crap upon as many posts as he can, whether he is asked to join or not.

Mark is far from "normal", too. Billy Smith already knows that....

The pro-code/no-code debates remind me of the Am/SSB debates on the ham bands back in the 70's.

Not true, Brain...Not true. However you go right on ahead with your tale of woe.

> Robesin is trying to > win you over by playing nice this time. Unfortunately, the rest of us

Robeson DOES "play nice"...Unless you blatantly lie to me or get caught lying about something that you should know better than to lie about.

For example: Brian P Burke promising to keep certain information
"private" via e-mail, but then running right on back to the NG and divulging that which he promised to not divulge.

Hence the complete lack of respect for Brian P Burke.

Let's start off with YOUR assertions that ARES.RACES, etc couldn't / wouldn't respond to any major disaster in any meaningful numbrs or for a sustained period.

I said you were wrong.

You said several nasty things about "uniforms", "patriotic bunting", "ARRL sockpuppet", etc [words, by the way, straight out of the Leonard H Anderson playbook].

Then came a series of hurricaines and tornaos to the south and southwest. All of them supported at length by ARES and RACES (among others, of course)

Then came September 11th...Then came Hurricane Katrina...Then came Hurricaine Rita...Again, all agencies YOU claimed couldn't / wouldn't respond did exactly that.

We can then dig up your "unlicensed devices" rants, among others.

> Robesin attacks when I reposted an article taken directly from the ARRL
> web site quoting an ARRL Vice President >in its entirety< stating that > amateurs have an overblown sense of self-importance.

And it wasn't true then, it's not true now.

The ARRL vice president's sentiments are NOT shared by the Department of Homeleand Security, the Department of Defense, Salvation Army, The American Red Cross, the Department of State and other agencies.

Only true when there is such evidence of that sort of behaviour, Brain.

So far it's hit the mark (pradon the pun) with Mark and Toiddie.
The jury's out on you, but you cleaned up your act.

Uhn huh.

And over 95% of Amateur Radio >>>IS<<< staffed by licensed Amateur

Yes, Brain, I know what the MOD is. You've allowed yourself to be hypontized by Lennie's incessant repeating of that claim.

It was wrong then. It's wrong now.

Brian P Burke uttering yet again more mistruthful statements in a public forum.

Sorry, brain, but one again YOU are lying.

The "excrement eating" posts belong to your "buddy", KB9RQZ. And the recent onslaught of re-tasked subject lines with exactly those words are HIS doings...Not mine.

Stop lying, Mr Burke.

I don't have Dave's logs.

Sigh.

I guess we can only watch Brain continue to make a fool out of himself.

Sure. Have an opinion.

But when you express it as "fact" and the "facts" don't bear up under the scrutiny of 3rd party reports to the contrary, don't get upset when you get "called" for your errors, Brain.

Brain.

You hated them before, Brain...I am sure I am only the focus of your disdain in THIS forum.

You've not had a single constructive, complimentary thing to say about ANY volunteer group save your Scouting troop.

Bigger sigh.

More of Brian P Burke's misquoting. I cited a news item some years ago where exactly that thing occcured.

Now for having mentioned it, Brain insists that I have made thinly veiled threats of a same nature.

An act of cowardice.

More deceit.

Brain...WHY do you lie so readily?

"Sailor Army Recruiter"...?!?!?

No Brain...let's get the FACTS right. My father served on Active Duty in the Untied States Navy during the Korean Conflict.

He was later an Active Duty recuriter for the US Army Reserve.
Yes, Brain, SOME people DO serve in more than one branch of the Armed Forces than one...

And no, Brain, Okinawa was NOT my "only overseas assignment".

Much of what you say is not "made up"...Just quoted out of context or misattributed.

But mostly quoted out of context.

That's not what I said. But you go right on ahead pretending it

Google provides evidence that any "opinions" uttered by you under any one of your "anonymous" names needs to be taken with a grin of salt
the size of the Rock of Gibralter.

As usual.....

Does Robesin always start off with a lie? Apparently so.

In any event, I changed his forgings back to the original content.

Do I have to start another tally of your lies such as I had to do a few years back? What was it? An average of 10 new lies a day for a week before I gave up?

No lies, Robesin. You just don't like my opinions.

There was no promise, and what you claim was a hostile action was nonsense.

Robesin has six other hostile actions. He says.

I don't use the phrase "sock puppet" or "ARRL sock puppet." I don't think I've ever used the phrase "patriotic bunting," either. I do use the word "uniforms" as in Robesin will do anything to get into a uniform since his USMC career was cut short by some unmentionable mystery.

Perhaps why Robesin claims that my statements are straight out of the Anderson playbook is because Robesin is unable to distinguish a Hot-Ham posting from an Anderson posting. His stupidity is not my problem, but he tries to make it so.

> Then came a series of hurricaines and tornaos to the south and > southwest. All of them supported at length by ARES and RACES (among

Do all amateurs have super-human abilities in Robesin-world?

ARES is a volunteer organization. It suffers from shortages of manpower and equipment just as do non-volunteer response organizations during an emergency.

> Then came September 11th...Then came Hurricane Katrina...Then came > Hurricaine Rita...Again, all agencies YOU claimed couldn't / wouldn't

Only Amateur Radio responded with exactly enough of everything?

Lots of agencies responded. Lots of News Reports about too little, too late. Lots of Government Officials claiming too little, too late. Lots of Citizen Victims claiming too little, too late. I don't know how Robesin missed it, unless he was busy with that 1,000 yard stare.

> We can then dig up your "unlicensed devices" rants, among others.

No rant. Unlicensed devices and cell phones handle most day to day emergencies.

There is no jury. There's only Robesin and he is subject to the laws of our nation.

Had Robesin said, "Sorry Hans, Amateur Radio >>>IS<<< Amateur Radio"

Let's keep the focus on MARS, shall we?

Gee, you sure hate it when someone out-assholes you using your own sick tactics.

You originated the excrement eating posting, and you have since requoted yourself for the sake of clarity, however, what you said was far from clear. If you'd like to restate what it was that you said, hopefully in a clearer way...

No, nevermind. It was sick enough the first time it came around.

You post in absolutes..., for example, "Sorry Hans, MARS >>>IS<<< Amateur Radio."

I pointed out that the Chief of Air Force MARS, at the time, was not an amateur radio operator.

That single fact sunk your whole position on MARS as an amateur organization, unless you want to argue the definition of "is."

Nope. You bring disdain upon yourself in your behavio[u]r toward others.

My comments were about people who are volunteers of multiple volunteer agencies, and when a crisis occurs, have to support one agency and not all. For example, you are a "professional" volunteer, committing to the Tennessee State Militia, the Civil Air Patrol, ARES, MARS, and who knows what else. And your professional position as an ER LPN should be a high priority in your community. So when the claxon goes off, which way do you run? Which volunteer organization(s) are left holding the bag because Robesin overcommitted himself and really isn't super-human?

Yeh. Big, big sigh. Maybe if you just quit posting such nonsense....

Here's a hint, next time you cite a news item, present it as a cited news item and not as a threat. It's called "clarity," and you lack it.

I perceived a threat. In Robesin's own words, one has only to perceive a threat for there to be a threat.

What scares me most isn't that you made a mistake in your grammar when posting that sick nonsense, it's that you posted the sick nonsense at all.

It is grossly off topic and has no place in an amateur radio discussion newsgroup.

I certainly hope that Paul Schleck agrees.

Two no-coders were talking on a remote repeater. They were planning on doing in, or what sounded like they were going to hurt someone. They quite clearly were discussing killing a guy. They said they were gonna go someplace called eleven and shoot skip. Not knowing who 'skip' was, I prayed for his safety.

On one of those rare occasions that I actually talked to a no-coder on 2-meters, I was on 146.52 simplex. The conversation was going well till out of no where the familiar flash of ignorance reared it's head again. The No-Coder was really proud of the fact that my signal was as strong on the reverse as it was on 52. Where do these people come from ?

Another No-Code funny. During a recent weather net, an OLD guy but a no-coder no less checked into the net as a mobile enroute to spotting location. A few minutes later, he notified net control that he was *destinated. Net control asked for his QTH. The No-Coder responded, The drive thru at McDonalds.

What's with all the no-coders and vanity calls. Do these idiots actually think people will think their old timers? Guess again. The minute they open their mouth the cat will be out of the bag. Real ham's won't ask you what your First Personal is.

Y'know, I'll agree with you, Wabbit. Mark's kooky for not attempting to improve his spelling to the point where he's comprehensible more often than not (or at least, he was until lately, anyway, as I've seen a few posts from him which seemed to have slightly better spelling) -- a bit kooky. You, OTOH, are not just a bit kooky. Dean Humphries, Robert Wolfe, and Ernie Primeau _combined_ are still not quite as kooky as you.

To be fair, I do not know of any college that has done this since well before I attended undergraduate school in the early 80's. I believe that in some cases you could (successfully) petition a school for credit under the guise of "real life experience" being a "replacement" for required class work. However, as a rule of thumb I do not believe having an amateur license has given you any college credit at a mainstream university since the mid 70's, if not before that.

I agree, but for reasons I will outline below.

> As I have said previously, this is my guess: There's > going to be an initial rush of "upgrades" of current Techs > to HF licenses.

I agree with the Tech upgrade aspect of your comment. If you look at ham radio statistics on Speroni's web site, you can see that since the restructuring that occurred in 2000, there has been a continual uptick in "extra" class licenses and a steady decrease in other license classes.

(The only exception to this is the Tech license, which, as the de-facto 'entry level' license, is logically going to see the most growth. It is the first license most people obtain, and its the only license you can get w/o the "hurdle" of the code test. Thus, the Tech license is the >30mhz equivalent of the Extra-class license, in the sense that w/o element 1a it was the license class you "topped out" at.)

The reason for trend simple: There is no compelling reason for an "active" licensee not to upgrade to the highest grade available. The major stumbling block for most amateurs -- the component which required the most work to pass -- has always been the code test. Once a licensee overcomes the hurdle of the 5wpm code test, the additional tests to upgrade to Extra are minimal. After all, the existing theory examinations do not actually test radio knowledge, they test your ability to rote memorize the question pool. I daresay that

With the removal of element 1a, there is no reason for many of the current Tech licenses to take, and pass, the theory examinations to obtain HF privileges.

I think there will be a noticable decline in Tech licenses, and an increase in General and Extra class tickets, as those folks migrate into HF privileges.

I also think the amount will be less than you expect. I think the migration will be measurable, but overall a lot less than most people expect. Much for the same reason why the decrease in the General license has been steady, but minimal each month. Many people are satisfied with the operating privileges they have, and they have no need to upgrade further. Those Techs who have no intention of working HF will more than likely remain Techs.

> will be a chartable increase in new-license applicants for the next 12 > months, and then it will taper back to close-to-original numbers.

I disagree with this assessment entirely. I believe the uptick in "new" licenses as the result of this change will be statistically insignificant. Total licenses have been decreasing steadily since April 03. This latest change will not change that trend.

Essentially, at this point in time, anyone who wants an amateur radio license can obtain one with relative ease. I do not believe there is this huge untapped reserve of potential radio operators who would join the amateur ranks if and only if HF access were available to them w/o a code test.

Oh, I'm sure someone will pop in with the inevitable "I have a friend who (insert story here) and will only become an amateur once the code test is removed because his interests lay on HF".

I'm sure there ARE some of those people. Are there a lot of them? I seriously doubt it. So, I think the net result of this change will be a measureable albeit minor bump in new licenses, if any noticable difference at all. Almost all these folks will obtain a Tech license and then immediately migrate into a General or Extra-class license.

> I say the overall census of the Amateur Radio service doesn't have > more than a 10% short term increase, and it will be back to "business > as usual" by this time next year.

For a few months, you may see a higher-than-average rate of increase in those license classes, but I wouldn't even give it 12 months -- I would say within 3 to 6 months, any influx of "new blood" will be minimal.

Within that same time period I do not think you will see a reversal of the trend in a decreasing number of licensed amateurs. The overall rate of decline may slow, but I do not expect this change to reverse the negative slope.

Amateur radio is a dead hobby.

My children are 17, 12, and 8. None of them express any type of interest whatsoever in ham radio. Computers, cell phones, text-messaging -- all staples of the modern world. 50 years ago, radio was a common staple of every household, and naturally, a source of education.

Today, my kids are interested in C# programming, not how the radio works.

The cell phone killed the utility of radio.

Talk around the world on a radio? Why do I need to spend $2000 on a decent HF setup when I can turn on my $500 dell and do the same thing?

Overall, Steve, I think some of your observations are dead-on, while others are misguided. Only time will tell, naturally.

that only applies to Robeson not his victums

Icertinaly precieved a threat when in 1998 he finished a long about guns and marksmenship with "one shot one Kill even in illiopolis" where I lived at the time. and ofcourse my father picking up the phone and hearing someone say I am going to kil you mark" roudn the same was in way threatening and calls to local postal office and police station asking where I lived wasn't threatening

you were lucky steve that Illiopis was so poorly served by the Phone service that you calls could only be traced to AC

so what are you SC,a fortune teller,soothsayer,prophet or what?
I have been studying the code for a while now and I know all the letters and everything but I am very slow with it yet. My goal has been to take the code test in January,I have already passed the tech and general tests.But I gotta tell you,all the crap from guys like you have really been a turn off. "Laziness,dumbing down,end of ham radio,all that other ignorant crap from a bunch of these people make me think why in the world learn the code,I sure would not want to make a contact with one of these guys.No way my sending would be good enough for these perfect hams and who needs the grief.But you have it all figured out and know what the future holds for this HOBBY.So I may go ahead and take the test next month and I might not.In the end it wont make any difference will it?I really wish you and those like you would accept the reality of the way things are and let it go, enjoy the hobby and stop spreading hate and discontent.You just drive people away with that junk.

..... we all believe in angels, and sometimes angels wear funny red suits.

Three years ago, a little boy and his grandmother came to see Santa at Mayfair Mall in Wisconsin. The child climbed up on his lap, holding a picture of a little girl. "Who is this?" asked Santa, smiling. "Your friend? Your sister?"

"Yes, Santa," he replied. "My sister, Sarah, who is very sick," he said sadly.

Santa glanced over at the grandmother who was waiting nearby, and saw her dabbing her eyes with a tissue.

"She wanted to come with me to see you, oh, so very much, Santa!" the child exclaimed. "She misses you," he added softly.

Santa tried to be cheerful and encouraged a smile to the boy's face, asking him what he wanted Santa to bring him for Christmas. When they finished their visit, the Grandmother came over to help the child off his lap, and started to say something to Santa, but halted.

"What is it?" Santa asked warmly.

"Well, I know it's really too much to ask you, Santa, but " the old woman began, shooing her grandson over to one of Santa's elves to collect the little gift which Santa gave all his young visitors. "The girl in the photograph . my granddaughter .. well, you see .. she has leukemia and isn't expected to make it even through the holidays," she said through tear-filled eyes. "Is there any way, Santa .. any possible way that you could come see Sarah? That's all she's asked for, for Christmas, is to see Santa."

Santa blinked and swallowed hard and told the woman to leave information with his elves as to where Sarah was, and he would see what he could do.

Santa thought of little else the rest of that afternoon. He knew what he had to do. "What if it were MY child lying in that hospital bed, dying," he thought with a sinking heart, "this is the least I can do."

When Santa finished visiting with all the boys and girls that evening, he retrieved from his helper the name of the hospital where Sarah was staying. He asked the assistant location manager how to get to Children's Hospital.

"Why?" Rick asked, with a puzzled look on his face.

Santa relayed to him the conversation with Sarah's grandmother earlier that day. "C'mon .... I'll take you there," Rick said softly.

Rick drove them to the hospital and came inside with Santa. They found out which room Sarah was in. A pale Rick said he would wait out in the hall. Santa quietly peeked into the room through the half-closed door and saw little Sarah on the bed. The room was full of what appeared to be her family; there was the Grandmother and the girl's brother he had met earlier that day. A woman whom he guessed was Sarah's mother stood by the bed, gently pushing Sarah's thin hair off her forehead. And another woman who he discovered later was Sarah's aunt, sat in a chair near the bed with weary, sad look on her face. They were talking quietly, and Santa could sense the warmth and closeness of the family, and their love and concern for Sarah. Taking a deep breath, and forcing a smile on his face, Santa entered the room, bellowing a hearty, "Ho, ho, ho!"

"Santa!" shrieked little Sarah weakly, as she tried to escape her bed to run to him, IV tubes intact.

Santa rushed to her side and gave her a warm hug. A child the tender age of his own son -- 9 years old -- gazed up at him with wonder and excitement. Her skin was pale and her short tresses bore telltale bald patches from the effects of chemotherapy. But all he saw when he looked at her was a pair of huge, blue eyes. His heart melted, and he had to force himself to choke back tears. Though his eyes were riveted upon Sarah's face, he could hear the gasps and quiet sobbing of the women in the room. As he and Sarah began talking, the family crept quietly to the bedside one by one, squeezing Santa's shoulder or his hand gratefully, whispering "thank you" as they gazed sincerely at him with shining eyes. Santa and Sarah talked and talked, and she told him excitedly all the toys she wanted for Christmas, assuring him she'd been a very good girl that year. As their time together dwindled, Santa felt led in his spirit to pray for Sarah, and asked for permission from the girl's mother. She nodded in agreement and the entire family circled around Sarah's bed, holding hands. Santa looked intensely at Sarah and asked her if she believed in angels.

"Oh, yes, Santa . I do!" she exclaimed.

"Well, I'm going to ask that angels watch over you,! "he said. Laying one hand on the child's head, Santa closed his eyes and prayed. He asked that God touch little Sarah, and heal her body from this disease. He asked that angels minister to her, watch and keep her. And when he finished praying, still with eyes closed, he started singing softly,

"Silent Night, Holy Night all is calm, all is bright." The family joined in, still holding hands, smiling at Sarah, and crying tears of hope, tears of joy for this moment, as Sarah beamed at them all. When the song ended, Santa sat on the side of the bed again and held Sarah's frail, small hands in his own.

"Now, Sarah," he said authoritatively, "you have a job to do, and that is to concentrate on getting well. I want you to have fun playing with your friends this summer, and I expect to see you at my house at Mayfair Mall this time next year!" He knew it was risky proclaiming that, to this little girl who had terminal cancer, but he "had" to. He had to give her the greatest gift he could -- not dolls or games or toys -- but the gift of HOPE.

"Yes, Santa!" Sarah exclaimed, her eyes bright.

He leaned down and kissed her on the forehead and left the room. Out in the hall, the minute Santa's eyes met Rick's, a look passed between them and they wept unashamed. Sarah's mother and grandmother slipped out of the room quickly and rushed to Santa's side to thank him.

"My only child is the same age as Sarah," he explained quietly. "This is the least I could do." They nodded with understanding and hugged him.

One year later, Santa Mark was again back on the set in Milwaukee for his six-week, seasonal job which he so loves to do. Several weeks went by and then one day a child came up to sit on his lap. "Hi, Santa Remember me?!"

"Of course, I do," Santa proclaimed (as he always does), smiling down at her. After all, the secret to being a "good" Santa is to always make each child feel as if they are the "only" child in the world at that moment.

"You came to see me in the hospital last year!" Santa's jaw dropped.

Tears immediately sprang in his eyes, and he grabbed this little miracle and held her to his chest. "Sarah!" he exclaimed. He scarcely recognized her, for her hair was long and silky and her cheeks were rosy -- much different from the little girl he had visited just a year before.

He looked over and saw Sarah's mother and grandmother in the sidelines smiling and waving and wiping their eyes.

That was the best Christmas ever for Santa Claus. He had witnessed --and been blessed to be instrumental in bringing about -- this miracle of hope. This precious little child was healed. Cancer-free. Alive and well. He silently looked up to Heaven and humbly whispered, "Thank you, Father. 'Tis a very, Merry Christmas!"

Put the idiots in the kill file. Don't waste your time reading them.

Good luck with with the license testing. Have fun with the hobby code, phone, digital, and slow scan TV. Ignore the idiots on the air along with the idiots in the news groups.

If you hadn't noticed, Mark is "Out-Assholing" Robesin. He's doing a damned fine job of it, too.

Everyone has issues, but there's no need for Robesin to scour the internet and bring stuff back to RRAP that has no place on RRAP. But thanks for asking.

Why, Oh Why is Robesin always so wrong?

I had the flu a few weeks ago and I cleaned up OK.

Those licenses - by and large - are the "Honeydo" Hams. These people picked up the Technician license and communicated with the XYL or OM to tell them to stop on the way home and get bred.... Opps! make that bread.

If I may, I can't help but notice that the olde time hams must have been born knowing all about HF or something. Look at the Extra test, and tell me that you will take a random group from off the street, set them down, and say 80 percent will pass the test? I think I'm pretty generous giving you a 20 percent spot from "anyone" to 80 percent.

I'm agreed with you there.

That will not change until that inactive groupp of Technicians is flushed from the rolls. They have not been active since cell phones became ascendent. The Honeydo list is handled quite nicely by that technology.

> Amateur radio is a dead hobby.

No, it isn't, and won't be dying either. Perhaps your definition of Ham Radio is fading away - a definition that I would guess where rank is measured by how fast a person can send and recieve Morse code.

Ham radio was a common staple in the household 50 years ago?

Okay, my son is interested in programming also. His lack of interest in radio has nothing to do with Cell phones, text messaging, or the internet.

> The cell phone killed the utility of radio.

Especially for those Honeydo Hams. But then again, they weren't interested in radio anyhow - just what it could do for them. And Cell phones indeed did what they needed, and did it better.

> Talk around the world on a radio? Why do I need to spend $2000 on a > decent HF setup when I can turn on my $500 dell and do the same thing?

If you think that Ham radio is an analog of cell phones and chat rooms and webcams, you're not getting it, and affecionados of those sports aren't at all likely to be interested in the ARS.

Now if ya really want to know what I think is the pressing problem, and the biggest threat to the future of Ham radio, I'll tell you.

Tune across 75/80 meters in the evening. Plenty of good, code tested (I'm assuming) amateurs who seem to have enough anger stored in their gullet to increase the blood pressure of ten normal people. They are mad at people like myself who are nickle Extras, they are mad at the new "crop of CB'ers" who are coming along since the FCC caved into the the forces of evil and eliminated Element 1. Hate, Hate, Hate. Frankly they sound a lot more like CB'ers than they know. Sorry, but a tune across 80 meters, and a lot of 20 meters puts the lie to how Morse testing keeps up the neighborhood. The question to ask is would you want your kids hanging out with these folk?

I firmly believe that the biggest threat to Amateur Radio at this time is the grouchy, grumpy Hams that turn every conversation into bitching about the great unwashed are destroying the hobby. Making sure that the new guys and gals feel perfectly unwelcome. Especially endearing is that many of them lack the social graces to avoid telling the newbies to their face about their hatred for them. First class folk, eh? It didn't bother me too much, but I have a mostly tough hide. But it does scare away a lot of folk.

I had hoped that the new system was going to be one in which an Op had to have some time in the saddle before upgrading, so as to get valuable experience, or at least have the chance to get it. FWIW, I had hoped that they retained the code test. But it isn't that way, so that means that there will be a lot of new folks with HF access who will need a lot of Elmering.

It will actually be a very exciting time, I'm hoping to get some new folk as excited about the hobby as I am.

What are you (collectivley speaking) going to do - help - or just make it as unpleasant for the new folk as possible?

They make themsleves into liars by falsely impersonating underage persons and by not fuilfilling the words they tell the victims online in their chats. Why don't you read it where they tell these victims of their deceit about how they have been with grown men and such? Why don't you read it where they say, "That would be cool." after someone makes an advance towards an adult who is posing as a teenager? And, where they agree to meet the person, etc.
Lost control, didn't you?
Is that why you feel as if you need to lie so much now? I see where lots of these false impersonation games are not sticking. They feel as if they can lie and then order the victims to get counseling in the gayblade, governmental, pro-choice tax leech counseling centers. They are doing nothing more than usury and fraud in many cases." -- Wentzky almost comes out of the closet as a pedo/ephebophile in MID:

Back a year or three, there was a thread asking for peoples' predictions on when the FCC would do no-code for all licenses. So who came closest?
I know that I didn't.

None of the area colleges do it -- that is, give instant credit because you have a ham license. Like I previously stated, though, I believe some (if not most) would allow you to petition for credit on the basis of 'life experience', and you probably would have a relative degree of success.

I doubt if you take anyone off the street at random they could pass any element test. However, study materials are easily obtained and, IMO, virtually anyone can pass with a minimal amount of effort put into studying them.

In the mid 90's when I routinely posted to this newsgroup, I made many observations that I felt the number of licensed hams was being artifically increased due to the extension of the licensing term from 5 to 10 years. Likewise, I made comments regarding the attrition rate of licensees resulting from the Tech license.

Starting in early '03, almost 12 years to the month the Tech license came on the scene (10 year license term + 2 year grace period), the number of licensed hams has steadily declined. This negative slope has continued, relatively unabated, for the past 3 years. I do not expect it to reverse the trend ever again. The best that may happen is there may be some form of equilibrum achieved where the number of licensed hams remains constant +/- a few thousand as expirations and new licensees fluctuate.

> Ham radio was a common staple in the household 50 years ago?

No, radio. Radio was the "tech" of the '50s. Today, that "tech" takes other forms: computers, cell phones, etc.

> If you think that Ham radio is an analog of cell phones and chat > rooms and webcams, you're not getting it, and affecionados of those

What draws people to amateur radio? The technical aspect, or the utility aspect?

It is my opinion that over the past 2 decades, the utility aspect of ham radio has been the main drawing point, not the tech aspect. I think the tech aspect of ham radio started to die out in the mid 80's when PCs started to hit the scene. Radio may have been the focus of future EE's interests 40 years ago, but kids I grew up with were making breadboards for their Apple]['s.

> Hate, Hate, Hate.

My operating time is minimal these days (too many other obligations), but I try to get online at least one Saturday or Sunday a month. I simply do not run across these same people that you do. I have many pleasant conversations with both young (and new) hams around the country.

I did not submit any comments on this licensing change, because, frankly, amateur radio is such a small part of my life these days that I could be bothered (didn't even realize. Had I made comments, I would have reiterated the comments I made in my 2000 NRPM filing, which called for 2 license classes -- a class a and class b license, one for privs above 30mhz and one for privs below.

It was my opinion in 2000, as it still is today, that the theory examinations should test actual knowledge, and not rote memorization skills. I supported the removal of element 1a in 2000, and I would support it again today -- as long as their is a corresponding upgrade of the theory question pools.

> It will actually be a very exciting time, I'm hoping to get some
> new folk as excited about the hobby as I am.

None of the EE/CS students I work with are interested in ham radio at all. The radio interests they have tend to focus in the consumer fields (like cell phones) rather than, say, Marine HF or EPIRB systems. Radio simply isn't "sexy" any longer.

Now we know why Mark can't author a cohesive sentence. Mussa been all those "chemcal"s messing up his brain functions.
That still doesn't 'splain why he thinks of another man's sphincter as a "love muscle", though.

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

There is no one who has "cellular phones" as a hobby. There is no tinkering with them. There is no making them work in a way other than the way they work. There is no equivalent of DXing, no equivalent of contesting. One can rag chew all day--at a price. A cellular phone is not the equvalent of amateur radio. Neither is the internet.

The idea of communicating without a landline phone being involved? The thought of being active in public service communications? The interest in DXing? Tinkering with circuits or antennas? Being able to modify commercially built equipment to make it better? Setting up and operating a fast scan TV station on one's own? Being able to stay in touch with local buddies who are also radio amateurs?

I like 160 meter operation. I enjoy working my DX the hard way. Installing efficient transmitting antennas and experimenting with various receive antennas interest me. I enjoy weak signal VHF and UHF operation. Some of the other locals have different ideas. K8JRG enjoys fast scan television. W8MSD and KC8FZH enjoy tweaking their linked 440 repeaters. WD8MTN enjoys DC-to-daylight mobile operation. K8LQM likes to rag chew with CW on 40m. KC8FZM uses 6m to control his model aircraft. KA8YEZ is heavily involved in public service work. Each fellow has his niche and yet is involved to a lesser degree with other aspects of amateur radio.

A cellular phone is a two-way radio. Don't tell those EE students or they'll all throw theirs away after discovering that they are un-sexy.

But, Dave. The kiddies using cell phones think that text messaging is all the hoot these days! Hams have been doing text messaging (CW) for decades. Cell phones? They can arguably be called modern day two way radios that have their roots in the precursors of Ham Radio auto patch systems of 30 or more years ago. Same concept, but with different frequencies and digital enhancements.
I am old enough to remember way back when my buddy set up an auto patch on his repeater system. The phone company was even then rattling the ears of Govt. regulators by arguing that Hams were making phone calls, "free" phone calls, and not paying the Piper..the Piper being Ma Bell.

Who needs "sexy"? Amateur Radio is a hobby that one takes to for the sheer enjoyment of same. Besides, when our cell towers go belly up due to power outages or simple overloads, I can easily switch over to my Marine batteries and carry on, uninterrupted, for weeks if need be.

These are the numbers of current, unexpired amateur radio licenses held by individuals on the stated dates, and the percentage of the total number of active licenses that class contains:

As of May 14, 2000:

Novice - 49,329 (7.3%)
Technician - 205,394 (30.4%)
Technician Plus - 128,860 (19.1%)
General - 112,677 (16.7%)
Advanced - 99,782 (14.8%)
Extra - 78,750 (11.7%)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 334,254 (49.5%)

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 291,209 (43.2%)

Total all classes - 674,792

As of December 15, 2006:

Novice - 23,712 (3.6%) [decrease of 25,617]
Technician - 289,703 (44.1%) [increase of 84,309]
Technician Plus - 33,310 (5.1%) [decrease of 95,550]
General - 131,280 (20.0%) [increase of 18,603]
Advanced - 70,015 (10.7%) [decrease of 29,767]
Extra - 108,244 (16.5%) [increase of 29,494]

(percentages may not add up to exactly 100.0% due to rounding)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 323,013 (49.2%) [decrease of 11,241]

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 309,539 (47.2%) [increase of 18,330]

Total all classes - 656,264 (decrease of 18,528)

Note that these totals do not include licenses that have expired but are in the grace period.

They also do not include club, military or other station-only licenses.

Note also that effective April 15, 2000, new Novice, Technician Plus and Advanced licenses are no longer issued.

Since April 15, 2000, FCC has renewed all existing Technician Plus licenses as Technician. By May of 2010, the number of Technician Plus licenses will drop to zero, because all of them will have been renewed as Technician or allowed to expire. It is therefore informative to consider the totals of the two classes, since the Technician class includes a significant number of Technician Plus licenses renewed as Technician.

None of this draws people to ham radio these days (in large numbers, I'm sure there are always exceptions and there are some people who join the amateur ranks for the reasons you list.) In reality I do not disagree with anything you have posted in your followup message.

All one has to do is view the licensing stats at Speroni's site to see the future of ham radio.

Amateur radio licensees peaked in 04/03 at 687,860 -- exactly 12 years (10 years + 2 years grace period) after the introduction of the Tech license, which illustrates all the no-code Tech license did for ham radio was stall the inevitable negative slope in licensing statistics we see today.

In the past 43 months, Amateur radio has lost 31,000 licensees. In the 43 months preceeding that high point, Amateur Radio added 11,919. Thus, we are losing amateurs at 2.5 times the rate we added them in just the same period before.

I do not believe that elimination of the code test will reverse this trend, because:

a) I do not believe the code test represented a significant barrier to entry for many people (post 2000) looking for HF privileges. At 5WPM the cost test did little more than to test the applicant's ability to rote memorize a table of dits and dahs, and perform a mental table lookup. For this reason, I do not feel there is this huge untapped reservior of people waiting in the wings to get a ham license, as there were when the code test was eliminated for VHF. I'm sure there are some people, I simply do not feel it is a statistically significant amount.

b) I do not feel the "problem" with ham radio is the code test, or geezer operators bitchin' on the air about non-coded operators. For reasons that clearly we can debate for eons, the younger generations that I work and interact with on a daily basis simply are not interested in ham radio the way folks 20+ years ago were. My 8 and 12 year olds would rather play XBOX than sit around learning radio theory. EE/CS students I work with are thinking "consumer electronics", not "old fogey HF radios".

We can get together in 2010 and see if there were any meaningful bump in license stats as a result of this change. I'm sticking with my original predictions in my original reply to Steve's posting :)

I agree with you, Mike, on this one. I've taught classes for the Extra class license. Many of the students came in with no technical background other than what they had learned in studying for their Tech & General licenses. It took a lot of study on their part to get the material.
Teaching vectors to people who have had no math higher than basic algebra was quite a challenge.

As far as those who may have just "memorized the question pools" instead of learning the material, memorizing 800+ questions for the Extra is still quite a challenge. Add the 400+ in the Tech pool and the 400+ in the General pool and that is an awful lot of questions to memorize.

I too believe that there is no such reservoir. When they see my antennas on my car, they ask out of curiosity but when I tell them what it is for, they often say "what's ham radio?" I explain a bit about ham radio to try to pique their interest but so far no luck. They do not express any interest in pursuing this hobby.

Definitely not dead or dying. We've simply peaked (and actually overshot due to the honeydo hams, etc). It will decline for a while and then stabilize. I saw some statistics somewhere on the web that supports this idea. If we exclude Japan (which licenses a large number of school children in science classes who then don't continue), we have the highest percentage of hams in the population. Most countires have approximately 1 ham per thousand people. We have just over 2 hams per thousand people.

It's nowhere near the time to start the funeral service. If each of us active hams as individuals manage to recruit one ham in our lifetime who stays active, we will hold steady as far as active hams go. Note that I specify active since as many as half our current ham population may be inactive for one reason or another. If we recruit more than one each, amateur radio will resume growth after flushing out the inactives.

This is one of several elements that could be a danger to amateur radio. There were and are a few of the codeless advocates that expressed open contempt for people who did not share their view. If that is carried into operation on the ham bands, that too will damage amateur radio. I will welcome all who are good people with good manners but I will not interact with those who treat me with disrespect. The respectful people, I will encourage them to keep active and help them learn that there are times when the bands are bad and the bands will improve. I'll help them learn how to use their equipment, etc. The disrepectful will have to fend for themselves. If they become respectful, I will then help them.

Personally I will give everyone whatever help they need unless they repeatedly act in a disrespectful manner (afterall anyone can slip occasionally). I will continue to invite new ops over to my shack and mentor them. I'll continue to encourage new hams to join a club in their area. If that club is not a good match, I'll encourage them to try other clubs. I'll continue to encourage them to participate in club activities (service activities, Field Day, etc). I'll continue to teach classes and continue to be a VE.

I disagree. I've taught classes where the students had no math background beyond basic high school math and they also had very limited ham experience.
They had to work very hard to get the material, especially the Extra class material.

Even if they just chose to memorize the questions, it isn't easy to memorize 400+ questions for Tech, 400+ questions for General and 800+ questions for Extra.

The Tech license existed before that. I believe that you are actually referring to when the codeless Technician license was created. Compared to the total number of licensees at this time, it's a pretty shallow slope. It could potentially stop declining in about 2010 or perhaps a year or two later. That will pretty much have flushed out the cell phone hams since 2000 to 2002 is about when cell phones really started becoming common and relatively affordable.

I'm not sure exactly why large numbers of people would be drawn to Amateur radio ever!

And so many of those Technicians had not been active in Amateur Radio after cell phones took over for local communiations. Another group left after the magnificent treatment that they reveived from the "superior" Hams.

I have issues with maintaining my weight, yet my wife remains as slender as the day we met. She has difficulty understanding how some people cannot control their eating.

I was a 3 pack a day smoker, and in 1977, I decided to quit cold turkey. She continues ot smoke, and apparently it is impossible for her to quit.

My point is just because it is such a simple matter for some people to learn Morse code, it does not mean that others will find it so simple.

One of the most amusing things about those who would have Morse code testing as the metric of an Amateur's worth, (of course, testing at above 5 WPM) is the dichotomy of learning the code was apparently easy for them. I see that all the time.

If learning Morse code is easy, then how does it become the metric of an Amateurs Worthyness?

And at what point is it the measurment ofhow good a Ham is? 5 WPM? 7 WPM? 20 WPM?

There are apparently some superhuman young people in Europe that can do better than 150 WPM! Nww those must be Uberhams! 8^)

I do. If I had a person in the shack to demonstrate the ARS to them, I would never ever put 75 meters on.

And I know quite a few EE students who are interested in RF, and have gotten the Tech license. Many have gone on to advanced license classes.

Someone ought to create an Xbox game that simulates a contest using CW on HF... Use the controller as a code key, and the game software creates pile-ups. One of the options of the game would be to select yourself as the rare DX, and deal with working with everyone in the pile-up.... And you don't have to fight with the condo board or HOA over antennas... :-)

I can remember the first time vectors and such came up in math class. I got hung up with the names they gave numbers that had "i (square root of -1)" in them. "imaginary". To me "imaginary" = "fake", so why would you talk about fake numbers in a math class? If this was English Lit class, then sure, anything goes there, but not in math class....
You'll probably run into things like this, and have no idea what the problem is when you do the teaching.

Actually wasn't too hard. I told them that mathematicians needed "imaginary playmates"!

From the practical point of view, I simply showed them how to work the problems with "triangles". The real number was the horizontal and the imaginary the vertical. This cuts it down to something they have seen before even if a long time ago. No sweat.

You can bypass many entry level courses with the CLEP exams.

For the higher level classes, most universities allow you to challenge a course. That is, you pay the fee and take the exams. The profs usually crap themselves because they don't know what is in their college catalogs, and they are unprepared to administer a mid-term and a final at the drop of a hat. But it's fun to do - providing you actually have the so called "life experience."

-1 is quite real, it is the square root of it that sets off those imaginations. Especially, when one views fractals and one imagines that nature makes use of it's sq. root rather nicely ...

Figured some genius :-) would have suggested this new block of calls by now, for no code extras:

NCnxx, like NC2SE

and for no code Generals:

NCnxxx, like NC2ISE

According to all the old key tappers, there won't be any need to.

All the newcomers will just be a bunch of angry cb'ers who will tune up their rigs and harass the old timers ...

Todd won't be out and about for a couple of days. He's busy helping Santa during this Christmas season.
Todd did take time out for a joyous little dance, however. You can see him in his little green elf suit at the link below. I bet you didn't know that he was so light on his feet, did you?

True, Brian. A small point of order: Bill Turner hangs out in Homebrew newsgroup. Robeson forgot to check his browser's group posting and shotgunned his message to most of them. The folks on Homebrew don't seem to do that or check their browser's postings on their headers. :-)

On your reply to whoever this "K4YZ" is, you have pointed out
the obvious truths that RRAP-ers of any reading length have seen: Robesin never admitting any mistake and always trying to state that other parties are at fault. He then goes ahead and personally insults those other parties. One can only come to a conclusion that Robesin lives in some unreality of his own and refuses to enter the reality of the rest of us. <shrug>

An utter absurdity is Robesin's continuing "charge" that you, me, and Mark are "against amateur radio." Nonsense. We are only against the long-obsolete morse code test for an amateur radio license having below-30-MHz privileges.

Robesin is trying the "Big Brother" style of propaganda straight out of George Orwell's novel "1984." He bombards the group with his "charges" in a rather insane (and inane) attempt to make us all look bad. The problem is that we are NOT against anything but the code test element, one which will be eliminated as soon as the R&O is published in the Federal Register with the stated elimination date.

Many federally-licensed radio amateurs (having received license certificates suitable for framing) ARE guilty of an overblown sense of self-importance. They've built up their own strawmen based on a tested morse code skill and now think they are the "equal" of ANY radio operator. Few are. Morse code is almost entirely used WITHIN amateur radio since no other radio service bothers with it for communication purposes. To say that is an "incorrect" statement is to banish the reality of the entire radio world in the spectrum from 9 KHz on up to 300 GHz.

To say the I am "unlicensed" (as Robesin did) is incorrect.
I've been licensed as a Commercial 1st Class Radiotelephone operator since 1956...always renewed, even past the time when all Commercial Radiotelephone license classes were eliminated and lumped together in the single "GROL" or General Radio-telephone Operator License. The GROL once required mail-in renewals but the FCC eventually made those "renewed for life."
Further, I've been co-owner of a business radio, PLMRS licensee (Private Land Mobile Radio Service) and being the person in charge of keeping its station technical standards within regulations. It is nonsense for Robesin to insinuate that ONLY amateurs "know how to operate a radio." Or, to state that "only amateurs are allowed to talk about amateur radio regulations (because they have amateur licenses). :-(

Robesin's "claims" and other quaint personal insults of his
are apparently whatever pops into his head at the time he is replying. He doesn't check it out, doesn't verify it, just shouts it out as if it is "truth." His insults rarely,
if ever, are truthful. Robesin is a loose cannon, shooting off his keyboard at the slightest provocation.

Robesin has his moments of sheer, utter ignorance. MARS is,
and always has been a MILITARY 'affiliate' radio service
and does NOT operate within allocated amateur radio bands.
MARS is directed by the US Government's Department of Defense. Where Robesin's confusion lies in the fact that volunteers with amateur radio licenses are allowed to operate on MARS frequencies, using MARS protocol, and always under the directorate of the DoD.

>> He doesn't want to repeat THAT part since it wouldn't serve
>> his purposes. (to try and embarrass me)
>Except that I was an actual MARS affiliate and knew what I was talking >about. You didn't. Still don't.

Robesin embarrasses himself. By extension, he embarrasses
all of US amateur radio by his actions and statements. He will not accept the fact that MARS is run by the DoD and isn't regulated by the FCC.

>> He also claims that I am repsonsible for the "excrement eating"

Robesin keeps trying his Orwellian "big lie" tactics. If wanted to be invisible to Google, he should set his Profile and/or message status as erased after so many days of first posting. Unfortunately, the TOP poster on RRAP (by number of posted and archived messages) is Robesin himself. He overtook long-time RRAP participant Cecil Moore many weeks ago. [Google will show the "top ten" on links they show to the public]

>> Brain, of course, has NEVER owned up to any one of his own

That's the Orwellian tactic used by the overgovernment in Orwell's novel.

>> any one of several claims of having been a DX station,

>David Heil/K8MN has me confirmed at least twice. Robesin knows this, >therefore Robesin lies.

The most damning of Robesin's lies is his continuing insistance of having a "USMC career" for 18 years. For several years Robesin has REFUSED to submit ANY evidence of that, no easily-digitized DD-214 form, no easily-digitized official documents, not a single digitized photo of him IN that USMC service nor any single individual reference by name who served "with" him in those 18 long USMC years.

Robesin's claims of USMC service, especially of the radio equipment he supposedly operated are either nonexistant or are plain wrong in several other parties' postings in here...all that archived on Google. In short, Robesin was LYING, or bluffing, or doing a con job in trying to convince all of the bogus military service he never had.

>In addition to slinging accusations of homosexual and pedophilia at >those who disagree with him, I am now a veteran-hater and a >volunteer-hater. Nevermind that I am a veteran and a volunteer.

My Army serial number clearly identified me as a volunteer and I am in regular correspondence with a radio amateur who not only was in the Army the same time I was, but served IN the same Company and at the same Army radio station.
N2JTV by call sign. Gene and his wife are presently enjoying the Holidays in Florida, away from the Long Island home.

There's NO truth to Robesin's claims of a NURSE (of any class) being able to have anyone "picked up" for anything
but immediate medical treatment LOCALLY. Such is difficult for a real, licensed Medical Doctor to do...in any state.
Robesin is once more the emotional loose cannon shooting
off his mouth.

>There's more, much more, but if I went on and on and on you'd probably >think I was making it up. I'm not. Google provides.

Absolutely, Brian. All of what we've said is still there in the archives of Google, thousands of posts of his. [a waste of recording medium in my opinion]

What will happen (it already has) is that Robesin denies what happened and "everyone else lies." He is clearly in his own unreality, not with the rest of us.

It's indeed unfortunate that Robesin continues to stuff
his own socks with lumps of coal, then pretending they are diamonds. May he get all those coals. Winter may be colder and those without jobs will need the heat.

A very Merry Christmas to you and your family, Brian, and to Mark and his, Bill and all the good folks who inhabit
the reality instead of their own twisted imaginations.

I believe that the last generation of hams in the USA has already been born, and it has nothing to do with how fast they can send beeps.

Radio is no longer magic to young people, and magic is what made it worth the effort.

indeed to robeson only code tested hams are allow to dicusss radio rules since he constantly seeks to exclude a ham, and goes beyond to try and exclude even code tested and aprooved hams unless they agree with him about code testing it is rather the condiction of Hamas for

Mark's fixation and relentless attacks aimed at Steve are borderline psychotic.

Mark has now entered the realm of fellow stalker, Roger Wiseman.

steve or lloyd or who ever you are calling your self today I do not attack Robeson except in self defense

nor do I enage in rentless attacks again that is the special of Robeson and Wisemen . I did not as steve did this week take Vaction time from work in order to hours making hunderneds of post to make hunreds perhaps thousands of flase charges

I also use steve as general dumping ground for the attacks I fee he inspires and I feel no qualms about using him this way after his years of abusing Me

what are you nuts ennough to think becuase I label your trash with steve name I realy beleive steve Robeson posted it?

that does make you a fool 'Not anybody" a fool as well the coawrd you clearly are the only conection to steve this thread has (that I know of) is steve inspries this sort of attacks as he did with ole woger and it serves

True, Brian. A small point of order: Bill Turner hangs out
in Homebrew newsgroup. Robeson forgot to check his browser's group posting and shotgunned his message to most of them. The folks on Homebrew don't seem to do that or check their browser's
postings on their headers. :-)

On your reply to whoever this "K4YZ" is, you have pointed out
the obvious truths that RRAP-ers of any reading length have seen: Robesin never admitting any mistake and always trying to state that other parties are at fault. He then goes ahead and personally insults those other parties. One can only come to a conclusion that Robesin lives in some unreality of his own
and refuses to enter the reality of the rest of us. <shrug>

An utter absurdity is Robesin's continuing "charge" that you, me, and Mark are "against amateur radio." Nonsense. We are only against the long-obsolete morse code test for an amateur radio license having below-30-MHz privileges.

Robesin is trying the "Big Brother" style of propaganda straight out of George Orwell's novel "1984." He bombards the group with his "charges" in a rather insane (and inane) attempt to make us all look bad. The problem is that we are NOT against anything but the code test element, one which will be eliminated as soon as the R&O is published in the Federal Register with the stated elimination date.

Many federally-licensed radio amateurs (having received license certificates suitable for framing) ARE guilty of an overblown sense of self-importance. They've built up their own strawmen based on a tested morse code skill and now think they are the "equal" of ANY radio operator. Few are. Morse code is almost entirely used WITHIN amateur radio since no other radio service bothers with it for communication purposes. To say that is an "incorrect" statement is to banish the reality of the entire radio world in the spectrum from 9 KHz on up to 300 GHz.

To say the I am "unlicensed" (as Robesin did) is incorrect. I've been licensed as a Commercial 1st Class Radiotelephone operator since 1956...always renewed, even past the time when all Commercial Radiotelephone license classes were eliminated and lumped together in the single "GROL" or General Radio-telephone Operator License. The GROL once required mail-in renewals but the FCC eventually made those "renewed for life." Further, I've been co-owner of a business radio, PLMRS licensee (Private Land Mobile Radio Service) and being the person in charge of keeping its station technical standards within regulations. It is nonsense for Robesin to insinuate that ONLY amateurs "know how to operate a radio." Or, to state that "only amateurs are allowed to talk about amateur radio regulations (because they have amateur licenses). :-(

are apparently whatever pops into his head at the time he is replying. He doesn't check it out, doesn't verify it, just shouts it out as if it is "truth." His insults rarely,
if ever, are truthful. Robesin is a loose cannon, shooting off his keyboard at the slightest provocation.

Robesin has his moments of sheer, utter ignorance. MARS is,
and always has been a MILITARY 'affiliate' radio service
and does NOT operate within allocated amateur radio bands.
MARS is directed by the US Government's Department of Defense. Where Robesin's confusion lies in the fact that volunteers with amateur radio licenses are allowed to operate on MARS frequencies, using MARS protocol, and
always under the directorate of the DoD.

>> He doesn't want to repeat THAT part since it wouldn't serve
>> his purposes. (to try and embarrass me)
>Except that I was an actual MARS affiliate and knew what I was talking

Robesin embarrasses himself. By extension, he embarrasses
all of US amateur radio by his actions and statements. He will not accept the fact that MARS is run by the DoD and
isn't regulated by the FCC.

Robesin keeps trying his Orwellian "big lie" tactics. If wanted to be invisible to Google, he should set his Profile and/or message status as erased after so many days of first posting. Unfortunately, the TOP poster on RRAP (by number of posted and archived messages) is Robesin himself. He overtook long-time RRAP participant Cecil Moore many weeks ago. That's the Orwellian tactic used by the overgovernment in Orwell's novel.

The most damning of Robesin's lies is his continuing insistance of having a "USMC career" for 18 years. For several years Robesin has REFUSED to submit ANY evidence of that, no easily-digitized DD-214 form, no easily-digitized official documents, not a single digitized photo of him IN that USMC service nor any single individual reference by name who served "with" him in those 18 long USMC years.

Robesin's claims of USMC service, especially of the radio equipment he supposedly operated are either non-existant or are plain wrong in several other parties' postings in here...all that archived on Google. In short, Robesin was LYING, or bluffing, or doing a con job in trying to convince all of the bogus military service he never had.

>In addition to slinging accusations of homosexual and pedophilia at >those who disagree with him, I am now a veteran-hater and a >volunteer-hater. Nevermind that I am a veteran and a volunteer.

My Army serial number clearly identified me as a volunteer and I am in regular correspondence with a radio amateur who not only was in the Army the same time I was, but served IN the same Company and at the same Army radio station. N2JTV by call sign. Gene and his wife are presently enjoying the Holidays in Florida, away from the Long Island home.

There's NO truth to Robesin's claims of a NURSE (of any class) being able to have anyone "picked up" for anything
but immediate medical treatment LOCALLY. Such is difficult for a real, licensed Medical Doctor to do...in any state.
Robesin is once more the emotional loose cannon shooting
off his mouth.

Absolutely, Brian. All of what we've said is still there in the archives of Google, thousands of posts of his. [a waste of recording medium in my opinion]

What will happen (it already has) is that Robesin denies
what happened and "everyone else lies." He is clearly in his own unreality, not with the rest of us.

It's indeed unfortunate that Robesin continues to stuff
his own socks with lumps of coal, then pretending they are diamonds. May he get all those coals. Winter may be colder and those without jobs will need the heat.

A very Merry Christmas to you and your family, Brian, and
to Mark and his, Bill and all the good folks who inhabit
the reality instead of their own twisted imaginations.

Were it not for flatulence, Len would be rendered speechless.

The flipside to every Robesin denial is more insults and attacks.
Here's the formula:

"I don't..." OR "I never..." AND "bunk buddies.." AND/OR "you eat my excrement off of another mans genitals.." AND/OR "you really, really like little cub scouts..."

Due to time limitations, I had to leave out about a thousand insults.

I love amateur radio. What I'm against are some of the nut jobs that the Morse Code Exam didn't filter out.

An ARRL VP, on the ARRL website, published her opinion that some amateurs have an overblown sense of self-importance. I believe her.

I don't see Robesin petitioning the government to have all government employees who work with amateur radio matters at the FCC become licensed amateurs.

How many old people are hams? How many young people? If there are not enough young people to replace the old and dying hams amateur radio will become extinct. There will always be a few new people, but if there is not sufficient mass to sustain the numbers, it will die. Manufacturers will either go out of business or build other things people want to buy. Governments will give frequency spectrum up to the highest bidder and that will not be amateur radio. Young people today have cell phones, computers, the internet. They have absolutely no need for amateur radio to communicate with friends around the world. To them it is as exciting as watching paint dry. CW would put them to sleep. Look around you, how many young people are hams? If not around 600,000 young hams, ham radio is history because in around 10-20 years most existing hams will be at room temperature.

While that is possible, it is much more likely (based on past history) that it will be published in the Federal Register within 30 days of having been posted on the FCC site. That would make it January 18 for publication. Then it would normally be effective 30 days after that, which would make the effectivity date February 17.

Or they may decide to get all their work caught up for the end of the year and it could go into effect sooner.

Either way, I've got my VE team lined up with additional members in case we get an unusually large number of applicants in Feb, Mar, & Apr. After that it should settle down to the normal or only slightly higher than normal number of applicants.

Since the FCC licensing system does not include DOB, it is hard to say for sure (and I'm not sure if you could cross reference the amateur database with, say, the ULS/FRB databases, which I do not recall if they contain DOB info anyway.)

So, I would say, the only thing we have to go on is anecdotal evidence. My observations have been that the No-Code Tech license brought in a lot of "younger" hams, but even so, these hams were in their 30's and 40's. Almost all of the newer hams in our local club tend to be codeless techs, some move to HF, others do not. At field day these days, I rarely see anyone under the age of 30, unless its a family member of another participant.

I would say that most HF operators tend to be older, because, mainly, it helps to own your own home to set up a decent HF station. You (usually) can't string an 80m dipole, install a tower, etc. on your landlord's property. Not to mention PO your downstairs neighbor when you start coming thru their TV set. Simple economics prevale: older men are more established, tend to own their own homes, etc.

Keep in mind manufacturers address other market segments too, so it is unlikely they will go out of business, although they may stop offering amateur-related gear at some point where it becomes economically unfeasible to at least recoup their R&D, plant, and manufacturing expenses. Plus they build gear not only for US amateurs but other countries as well.

> Governments will give frequency spectrum up to the highest bidder and that Someone else can comment on this, I do not follow the spectrum allocation wars. Since most consumer-oriented spectrum is on the higher frequency bands, I would guess the demand for spectrum < 2m would be minimal. Can't say that for sure though, that's just a "gut feeling" on my part, and someone who is more "up" on spectrum demands could post for sure.

> the world. To them it is as exciting as watching paint dry. CW would put > them to sleep.

As I've stated in my previous postings, I do not think that CW (in the form of the Element 1A licensing requirement) has been a serious deterrent to a statistically significant amount of people over the past 6 years.

If you look at licensing statistics from Speroni's site.

The (no-code) Tech license was introduced in 92. For roughly 5 years, we saw an upshoot in licensees, until 97, where things started to taper off again. The "pool" of new people started to taper off, and we were unable to maintain the growth. For roughly a year, licenses hovered around 674k.

Elements 1b and 1c were eliminated in 2000. Again, we saw an uptick in new licensees, until April 03 -- roughly 12 years to the month that the Codeless Tech license was introduced. I do not believe in coincidences -- 12 years (10 years + 2 year grace period) -- and I believe these stats would suggest that the Tech license simply delayed the inevitable downturn in licensees we would have seen earlier.

From 2000 until April 03, we added 11k new licensees. Then the downward slope has started, and over the past 40 months we have lost 32k licensees.

It is my belief that most people who were interested in HF operation, but were turned off because of the code test, already got licensed in the 2000-2003 timeframe. Yes, there are some people who cannot pass a 5wpm code test. However, these people are few and far between.

A 5wpm code test requires little more than rote memorization of a table, and then a mental table-lookup during the testing. This is dramatically different from the 13 and 20wpm code tests, where you have to "hear" entire letters or words even, in order to have a QSO. (A good friend of mine copies CW at close to 30wpm, and can have a conversation with me in his shack at the same time, while listening to the other operator in the background. When I asked him how he did it, he told me he hears whole 'words', and his subconcious copies the conversation while he can focus on other things. That's a "skill" it takes a very long time to develop. Oh, BTW, he's 38, and has been licensed since he was a teenager.)

Many hobbies have become passee over the years, and I believe ham radio is eventually going to become one of them. Not many folks play horseshoes today, for instance. The death of ham radio is neither good nor bad, it simply "is". I suspect ham radio will be around for quite a few years to come... certainly, it will not go away in my lifetime (assuming I live to the average age of 72, that would be 30 years from now). Amateur Radio will not die with a bang. It will die with a wimper, and slowly fade away over time.

Hans, I respectfully disagree. What we PERCEIVE to be the focus of ham radio will shift ... calling CQ for hours on end while I could get into a chat room in seconds and achieve the same result will go away. The HF bands will slowly dwindle as waiting for the sunspot cycle to rev up fast loses its charm when I can pick up a cellphone and have digital clear communications any time of the day or night.

So we refocus on what DOES fire kids' rockets. Making robots and running them with digitally coded RF. Setting up the house so you can turn on lights and appliances with DTMF. Talking to astronauts in space. Satellite communications.

Perhaps the brain trust in Newington is woefully late in calling a summit meeting of the brethren and sistren to sort this all out. Perhaps Wayne Greene was right after all, that the ARRL has long since outlived its usefulness, and the structure set up by Maxim is in the final stages of crumbling away. Perhaps lots of things.

But amateur radio (and perhaps we need a new term for THAT, too) will live on, at least in the generation that I am teaching, but only with a totally new focus and dedication.

Hello Robert,

I don't know if the Report and Order has been published in the Federal Register
yet. The new rules cannot become effective until at least 30 days after that.
I have been told that because the Report and Order modifies an earlier one
(the "omnibus" R&O), the delay will be 60 days rather than 30, but I'm not sure if that is true.

The process went on so long that we began taking 'second guesses' a year or so ago.

Here's an update on the "when will FCC drop Element 1?" pool.
This means the effective date of the FCC action that completely eliminates Morse Code testing for any class of amateur radio license in the USA.

Note how almost all the predicted dates and all of the second predicted dates have already passed:

WA2SI: September 13, 2003 (first prediction)
KF6TPT: September 29, 2003
KC8EPO: December 31, 2003
K2UNK: January 1, 2004 (first prediction)
K2ASP: March 15, 2004
AA2QA: April 1, 2004
N2EY: April 15, 2004
N3KIP: May 1, 2004 (first prediction)
KC8PMX: July 1, 2004
WA2ISE: August 1, 2004
K3LT: September 15, 2004
WK3C: December 30, 2004
N4PGW: May 22, 2005
N8UZE: July 1, 2005 (first prediction)
N3KIP: December 31, 2005 (second prediction)
N8UZE: January 31, 2006 (second prediction)
N2EY: March 1, 2006 (second prediction)
KB9RQZ: April 1, 2006

K2UNK: July 1, 2006 (second prediction)
AB2RC: July 1, 2007
KB3EIA: July 5, 2007
W5TIT: June 1, 2008
WA2SI: Complete elimination not within the foreseeable future (second prediction)

Right now it looks like AB2RC is the winner, with K2UNK a close second.

Even though K2UNK's date is closer to the announcement date, the rule states "effective date of the FCC action that completely eliminates Morse Code testing for any class of amateur radio license in the USA". Which cannot be any earlier than January 19, 2007, and will probably be late February or even early March 2007 if the 60 day rule is in effect.

Maybe I should start a new pool, in which people get to predict the growth or decline in the number of US amateurs by a certain date after the new rules.....

you are an optimist I expect it to last about 50 years myself althought
I do expect it to thin about 20-30 years out

I doubt he will ever grow up more likely check out horizontaly

but given the rate the OT are dying off no need for a new block we will be able to recylce those calls soon enough

I don't know about the verile, however I did survive.

But at least I was "exposed" to the action. Morkie just exposes himslef.

I never did.

However it's now apparent to me why the USMC had the highest percentage of High School grads and continuing education participants than any other branch, Brain...

You boys just have a hard time with English.

Good for you. Most folks do rather well with just symptomatic treatment. Others don't.

Keep you eyes on the mail, Brain...Sending you a remedial English comprehension study guide...Take my advice...Use it.

Hello, Robert...Long time....

The sarcasm aside, there are already 2x2 "N" calls, however there will not be any 2x3 "N" calls unless NTIA has a change of heart and releases them.

Hope you've had a good holiday.

As of last Friday, it had not been published in the Federal Register. This new Report and Order do not modify the "omnibus" R & O and stands completely on its own. However, it could easily be 60 days from the announcement as it may take up to 30 days to get published in the Federal Register and then another 30 days for its implementation date.

The only thing "sick" or "demented" here is you, Morkie...Along with your ADMITTED perversions and lying.

(Some compnay Brian P is keeping, considering his verbalized

What's a "simple truth" is that you are a paranoid putz.

> you have plainly admited you take time off from work and supporting

I didn't take time off from "work" or "supporting my family" to be offensive, Morkie.

Again...UNLIKE YOU I have a REAL JOB with REAL BENEFITS, and one of those benefits is paid time off. And I've NOT taken those days off and would have lost them had I not taken them...So guess what, fatboy...?!??! I didn't miss a dime of income sitting at home for a couple days.

That YOU found my post about supporting our wounded Veterans "offensive" only SUBSTANTIATES my assertion that you're a creep of Thanks, Dee.

That means Dec 26 at the earliest. Effective date Jan 26 at the

I thought it modifies the "omnibus" R&O by moving the automated data segment on 80 meters to 3585-3600.

Whether that invokes a 60 day rule is another issue.

Agreed.

In any event it's at least a month away. Maybe more.

I don't need to add anything, Morkie.

Anyone who cares to can start researching any of your 37 screen names and add them up.

Yes, Morkie.

Two days ago you not only retorted to each post I had, but ADDED THREE WHOLE PAGES of either new "threads" or posts revived from as long as EIGHT MONTHS AGO!

I've not been "abusive" to you, Morkie.

I've fed you your own mularkie back to you.

If you don't like the taste, why not reconsider what you're serving?

Uhhhhhh. No. As YOU have pointed out, there have been several occassions over the past 6 months when my work and other obligations have kept me from RRAP. That, however, didn't keep YOU from posting as many as 200 posts a day for those same many weeks...

At the same time, of course, you keep generating "apology" threads wherein you insisted that your spamming of the NG was absolutely necessary despite my lack of immediate participation.

It's all about you, fatboy..ALL about you!

Yet another blatant lie.

More Morkie Mularkie

Why does Morkie keep insisting that I am "lying" when all I am doing is quoting HIM verbatim?

I'm not.

Here's YOUR words AGAIN, Morkie:

You draw disability from one job, and since you can't work anymore, you get a job as a nurse with paid time off.

That's a pretty sweet deal for a guy thats always claiming Mark is a welfare cheat.

Funny how you're almost always wrong, though...

They use a Morse Code key, and the mode is called CW.

The way it reads sounds like it is being treated as a "new" ruling rather than modifying the last R&O. But it is hard to say until it is published on what they will do with the implementation date.

However, I've got my VE team ready to handle extra applicants in Feb, Mar, & Apr. It's better to have extra people on hand and not need them than to be short.

You've been told to send nothing to me. Oh well, the postal inspector will have some extra work this week.

Anyway, above you write, "Keep you eyes..." and further up, you claim that Mark exposes "himslef." Then you tell me that I need remedial English comprehension. Is it any wonder that you're so frequently misunderstood? What I can't figure out is why you lay all of your miscommunication problems on other people. You should clean up your own act before accusing others.

And another thing, Mark could be right about you libeling him with your claims of him exposing "himslef."

Just like you spread your AIDS and your shemale wife's genital herpes every time you have sex with those 17 year old boys, Marqueer.

ah Woger tkaing time from your "war" with Hal tuner I see to spread lies here lets see no AIDS no gnetital herpes in the house no she male at all let alone wife and no sex withh 17 yo boys other than than those lies you are fine

go fight Hal he is more your speed woger

-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-
-= the BBC, television and radio -=

The first incident in June 1990 was when a BBC newsreader made what seemed to be a reaction to something which had happened in my home, and out of context of what they were reading. My first reaction was disbelief; nothing of the sort had ever happened before, the idea that such a thing could occur had not crossed my mind, yet there was no doubt of what had just taken place. My disbelief eroded as this recurred time after time. Besides the news, offenders included shows such as Crimewatch (!), Newsnight, and "entertainment" shows. There seems to be very little moral understanding among the people who make these programmes; they just assume they will never be caught, so they carry on without a thought for the illegality or amorality of what they do. The only time I ever heard a word raised in doubt was by Paxman being interviewed by someone else (I think by Clive Anderson) back in 1990; referring to the "watching" he said it troubled him, and when asked by the host what you could do about it, replied "Well, you could just switch it off" (meaning the surveillance monitor in the studio). He clearly didn't let his doubts stand in the way of continued surreptitious spying from his own or other people's shows, though.

Now you're convinced this is a troll, aren't you? This story has been the subject of much debate on the uk.* Usenet newsgroups for over a year, and some readers believe it to be an invention (it has even been suggested that a group of psychology students are responsible!), others think it symptomatic of a derangement of the author, and a few give it credence. Quite a few people do know part or all of the story already, so this text will fill in the gaps in their knowledge. For the rest, what may persuade you of the third possibility is that some of the incidents detailed are checkable against any archives of radio and TV programmes that exist; that the incidents involve named people (even if those hiding in the shadows have not made their identity or affiliations evident), and those people may be persuaded to come out with the truth; and that the campaign of harassment is continuing today both in the UK and on the American continent, in a none-too-secret fashion; by its nature the significant risk of exposure increases with time.

On several occasions people said to my face that harassment from the TV was happening. On the first day I worked in Oxford, I spent the evening in the local pub with the company's technical director Ian, and Phil, another employee. Ian made a few references to me and said to Phil, as if in an aside, "Is he the bloke who's been on TV?" to which Phil replied, "Yes, I think so".

I made a number of efforts to find the bugs, without success; last year we employed professional counter-surveillance people to scan for bugs (see later) again without result. In autumn 1990 I disposed of my TV and watched virtually no television for the next three years. But harassment from TV stations has gone on for over six years and continues to this day. This is something that many people obviously know is happening; yet the TV staff have the morality of paedophiles, that because they're getting away with it they feel no wrong.

Other people who were involved in the abuse in 1990 were DJs on BBC radio stations, notably disc jockeys from Radio 1 and other stations (see the following section). Again, since they don't have sense in the first place they can't be expect to have the moral sense not to be part of criminal harassment.

Name: Kirill
Call: VE3AXC

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year everyone! I will be a subscriber of this forum from now on, so nice meeting everybody!

On this note, please allow me to stray a bit off this forum's topic but my info might still be relevant for some. I myself have been a ham for 8 years; also run a small QSL card printing business (my printishop is located in Toronto, Canada) and have a web site specifically dedicated to that www.qslcanada.com

Reason I would like to post this message on this forum is to let your group know that I have a pretty good group referral discount program.

The idea is quite simple and there is no catch.... For each HAM who is referred by you and who wishes to place an minimum order of 500 cards, you would receive 100 (custom designed) cards of the same type free of charge. The offer is transferable, so if for example you let me know that you don't need any more cards, I will be happy to print additional 100 cards for your friend free of charge (or charge for 100 cards less)

This offer may be ideal for your group or a club you belong to. For example, if you refer say 3 HAMs who would like to print a minimum 500 cards for themselves, you would receive 300 cards as appreciation for spreading the word about qslcanada
; you could transfer it to someone as a gift ; or each of 3 Hams would only pay for 400 cards, since each one will get 100 cards free. To sum it up, each of the referral counts as 100 free cards in any shape or form. Pse let me know if you have any questions.

So if bunch of Hams in this group who are into QSLing might be interested to giving someone a free gift or getting a good deal on the next batch, pse let me know. The offer is valid any time in future. www.qslcanada.com has quite a bit of samples, more info and e-ham reviews

PS Have got to mention this, since it did happen before, where some folks took this posting too personally. I just wanted to get this info out there ONE TIME ONLY! Please don't call me any spammer names or hate mail me. I believe this to be a fair group offer any hams by hams enterprise deserves a little exposure to start out with.

I will try to participate in this group from now on, so best 73 to everyone! Happy New Year!

No, Robesin, thats just not true. You're the one who invented the idea that Mark eats your excrement from another mans genitals. And thats just as sick a thing as I've ever heard of. I'm sure there's a group of patent-leather wearing bikers in Pee-Wee's Great Adventure that would welcome you to their party.

It has no place on RRAP.

Your excrement, Robesin. What is your excrement doing on another man's genitals?

Dear God, I don't want to think of how it may have gotten there.

That banner ("Mission Accomplished") referred to the aircraft carrier's mission, not the war itself. You should know that a war is composed of hundreds, if not thousands, of individual missions.
That carrier had just finished hers and was headed home.

The news media intentionally misrepresented that banner, and you fell
for it.

I'm sorry. What is "enage"? Which age? I know nothing about "star shit", but apparently you do. Do you prefer "star shit" from, say, Paris Hilton or Nicole Ritchie? Naaahhhh, not your style. My guess is that you'd prefer "star shit" from the likes of Elton John or Boy George.

And what, exactly, did this post have to do with you? As usual, you come bumbling in to leave an uncalled-for comment that is less than legible and barely understandable.

Bizarre magazine article June/2001

The appropriately-named Bizarre magazine, a UK publication, featured my website on page 114 of their June 2001 issue (number 47). They present a copy of the letter MI5 sent me in February 1997.

This article was pointed out to me by a reader of Bizarre magazine. I suppose I should be pleased to be placed at no. 1 of a list of top ten paranoid sites, even though paranoia is only incidental to the the material on this website, which is objective.

Financial Times 17/Sept/1999

David Bowen performed a Web Site Inspection in the Financial Times, in which he compared the "Open Government" approach of the American intelligence community with the closed world of British spookdom. The second paragraph mentions this site.

It appears that there are very few sites with material information on SS/SIS, which leads to this site's descriptions of those agencies being frequently linked to by other persons' pages. Perhaps there is an irony that American agencies which have much more capability appear to be more transparent than British agencies which have much less.

Please be advised, the above is not Mark Morgan (who never calls himself "Morky"), but an impostor, a frogger (as opposed to an outright "forger", though the difference in his case is slight) I have dubbed "Wabbit". TEH WAY OF THE K00K
Never learn from your mistakes.
Always practice your mistakes; you may get them right.
Always pick on those smarter and tougher than you.
Always believe that only you know the TRVTH.
Never allow logic or reason get in the way of a good k00k.
When being overwhelmed by logic and reason: k00ksuit!
If you are going to be wrong, do it at the top of your lungs.
When caught in a lie: LIE!
When in doubt: Order the Crab Won Ton
Plagiarism is your friend. Use it.
Whenever contradicted; morph, start calling people names, and make false accusations. Include the children of your target in your allegations, even if they don't have any.
(06-Jun-05) When nobody else will listen, post to your own fan group.
(06-Jun-05) Obviously, since you have your own fan group, this must mean that you have fans. Post prolifically to your fan group - you wouldn't want to disappoint them!

(10-May-2005)Everyone reads usenet. Approval here means approval everywhere.
Post numerous blank posts, or posts containing only a message id.
Post numerous copy&paste web articles from crackerpot websites.
Never forget to call kookologists "k00ks."
If there are several, call them "sockpuppets" too
When all else fails, accuse various and sundry kookologists of e-mailing viruses to you. This is a sure-fire method of garnering sympathy and ensuring that the General Public will always see things your way. An especially effective sub-strategy here is to accuse them of infecting you with the 'Sasser' worm via e-mail.
Quote notorious scientists or writers - it makes it look as if they approve the drivel you are writing!
(9-Jul-05) Anytime your computer is infected with a virus, bogged down by spyware, attacked over your internet connection, or otherwise suffers from preventable problems, government agencies are responsible and are trying to silence you and are monitoring your computer files.
Ignore all traffic signs and feel free to trespass, you don't have to obey any rules.
Scare your enemies with lawsuits, police escorts and whines.
Always back up your empty (albeit noisy) threats with phony LARTs, false police reports, and harassing letters to the FBI and other gubbermint agencies.
Be vigilant in your redundancy. The more you repeat yourself, the more likely others will believe you!
If you can't find anyone as crazy as yourself to support you in the flamewars you start with the normal population, create sock puppets and use anonymous remailers that shamelessly hang on every word you write.
(17-Mar-05) When dealing with law enforcement, remember that it is they who have the problem, not you. Be sure to inform them of this at every available opportunity, as they will surely appreciate your constructive criticism. Be sure to make them aware that YOU KNOW YOUR RIGHTS! ("The cops like that, when people know their rights. That way they don't have to read them to you on the way to the station." - George Carlin)
The more your fake personalities adulate you, the more respect you'll get!
When confronted with a reality that you don't like: Announce loudly that you are departing, never to return as long as there's an Internet. Come back in three or four days and claim you were drunk, hacked, abducted by alience, or forged. Alternately you can just not even mention your prior departure, and if anyone asks you about it, either ignore them or respond with something along the lines of "YOUR NOT THE BOSS OF ME! PLONK!" People really know you mean business then.
Always remain clueproof.
(20-Mar-05) Anyone who does not believe that you are the reincarnation of [$DEITY_OR_PROPHET] is obviously an infidel lacking in faith whose soul in in peril of everlasting damnation.
When responding to one line challenges, post paragraphs of rants and screed in response.
Incoherency is not a roadblock to poasting.

Neither is illiteracy.
Delusions poasted often enough become fact.
Claim you will destroy <insert newsfroup> for attacking you.
When spnaked, send cmsg for Fanboi newsfroup(s).
Find your Lame, Use your Lame, Be your Lame!
Post Edit when the TRVTH hurts.
Always sneck the offending newsfroups.
Always poast pictures of yourself so you can be admired in all your k00ky glory.
Always accuse others of the very acts you are guilty of.
Post lots of boasts about your high IQ and incredible talents.
(20-Mar-05) If you repeat a lie often enough, it becomes the truth.
Anybody who fails to understand this is engaged in a deliberate campaign of misinformation and character assassination.
Always <plonk> somebody just before replying the plonkee!
The k00k considers itself the most intelligent person in any conversation, possibly on the planet. Other people are benighted and ignorant, and have been waiting their whole lives for the k00k to rescue them from intellectual darkness.
Write a self-published book and claim it a success. Bonus points for comparing it to "Mein Kampf" and/or the Bible.
Declare yourself equal to a deity of your choice.
Claim that you've come from other planets.
Claim thousands of past lives.
Frothing complaints carry far more weight when you send them from "legal@" some domain.
Nothing strikes terror into the hearts of your detractors more than telling them that you're archiving their messages for possible use in the future.
Never forget that everyone else posting to Usenet is a paid disinformation agent looking to discredit you.
Usenet is governed by US law. If a poster in Romania killfiles you, he's obviously violating your 1st Amendment rights and can be sued.
Every news admin in the world hangs out in NANAU, and they're just dying to nuke the account of that meanyhead who just called you "fucknozzle". Drop 'em a line - that's what they're there for, after all.
AUK will be closed down. Just you wait and see.
They've nuked hundreds of accounts in the name of free speech and yours will be next.
The k00k will, without any trace of irony, lie, manipulate, impersonate, censor, and declare themselves powerful in ways ranging from the ability to have an account shut down to being God Herself, in order to convince people that they are not liars, manipulators, censors, or insane.
Abuse women while telling how many hundreds you've loved. Nevermind that you're one ugly motherfucker and that there were 30,000 femininas that thought you were a scumbag with bad teeth.
Remember that your ko0ky klaims are 'facts', and that 'facts' do not require proof.
Do not neglect to poast your responses to forums that the originator doesn't read. This will make the people in that forum very impressed with how you tear him to shreds without him being able to respond. They like it even better if you are off-topic for that forum.

Keep in mind that lack of evidence supporting your konspiracy theory actually _is_ evidence, of how effective the konspiracy is in hiding.
(06-Oct-05) When spanked, always retreat to the safety of the Ad Hominem.
(04-Aug-2005) When spanked mercilessly for days on end, proving with each poast just what an illiterate and ignorant fool you are, ALWAYS claim ownership of [person(s),froup(s)]. This works on so many levels. It inspires dread in your opponents that they will no longer be able to poast in their home froup and that they will eventually have to pay rent, to name just two.
Any problems with your poasts are the fault of the konspirators, who are trying to stop you from preventing the extinction of humanity.
Konspiracies that are able to subvert whole governments are always unable to silence konspiracy ko0ks.
The entire United States government is willing to spend millions of dollars for the sole purpose of harassing you.
Hollywood is making movies based on your personal life.
Do not consult psychiatrists or other mental health professionals. They are part of the konspiracy, and will sedate you and lock you away and keep you drugged if you tell them the truth.
Numerology and Astrology are respectable sciences and are useful for proving your case.
Everyone is Tim Hill, or David Green, or...
There is a fine line between trolling and kookery. Find that line and cross it repeatedly. When you are killfiled and/or LARTed for net.abuse as a result, claim victory. If you lose multiple accounts, this merely proves that you are indeed a world-class troll, with a black-belt in manipulation.
If you respond to every post someone else makes, they're obsessed. If they respond to less than 1% of your posts, they're even more obsessed.
Publishing people's real names, addresses, and phone numbers when there's no other way for you to come out of a flamewar with any dignity is cool, and proves that you are a master of secret internet information stores, and absolutely not to be fucked with.
Everyone is out to get you. You can put a stop to this by telling everyone that they're out to get you at every available opportunity.
You are the only sane one.
Those that give you a hard time about morally bankrupt things you yourself admit to are just persecutioners of the new inquisition.
Yelling in all caps and cursing at your detractors is debate. Your detractors laughing at you with sarcastic remarks is obvious anger and jealousy.
If doing something results in the loss of your account, legal hassles, or blunt trauma injury, do it again. It always works better the second time.
Asterisks, lots and lots of Asterisks.

Kwanzaa?

Isn't that a special holiday for satan worshipers?

It was invented by a man who had tortured two women with a soldering iron and a vise? Who called himself "Dr Maulana Karenga." But, whose real name is Ronald McKinley Everett and this man spent several years in prison for the victimization of these women?

That kwanzaa?

Agreed.

I'd bet on 30 days, not 60.

Excellent!

There may also be a rush of folks in the next few weeks who want to upgrade or be licensed before the changes take place.

Unfortunately, none of those things will help in obtaining an amateur radio license of any kind. I'm likewise busting a gut, "John". There's always someone who is up for a challenge.

"Gettysburg" Address, "John".

TEH WAY OF THE K00K
Never learn from your mistakes.
Always practice your mistakes; you may get them right.
Always pick on those smarter and tougher than you.
Always believe that only you know the TRVTH.
Never allow logic or reason get in the way of a good k00k.
When being overwhelmed by logic and reason: k00ksuit!
If you are going to be wrong, do it at the top of your lungs.
When caught in a lie: LIE!
When in doubt: Order the Crab Won Ton
Plagiarism is your friend. Use it.
Whenever contradicted; morph, start calling people names, and make false accusations. Include the children of your target in your allegations, even if they don't have any.
(06-Jun-05) When nobody else will listen, post to your own fan group.
(06-Jun-05) Obviously, since you have your own fan group, this must mean that you have fans. Post prolifically to your fan group - you wouldn't want to disappoint them!
(10-May-2005)Everyone reads usenet. Approval here means approval everywhere.
Post numerous blank posts, or posts containing only a message id.
Post numerous copy&paste web articles from crackerpot websites.
Never forget to call kookologists "k00ks."
If there are several, call them "sockpuppets" too
When all else fails, accuse various and sundry kookologists of e-mailing viruses to you. This is a sure-fire method of garnering sympathy and ensuring that the General Public will always see things your way. An especially effective sub-strategy here is to accuse them of infecting you with the 'Sasser' worm via e-mail.
Quote notorious scientists or writers - it makes it look as if they approve the drivel you are writing!
(9-Jul-05) Anytime your computer is infected with a virus, bogged down by spyware, attacked over your internet connection, or otherwise suffers from preventable problems, government agencies are responsible and are trying to silence you and are monitoring your computer files.
Ignore all traffic signs and feel free to trespass, you don't have to obey any rules.
Scare your enemies with lawsuits, police escorts and whines.
Always back up your empty (albeit noisy) threats with phony LARTs, false police reports, and harassing letters to the FBI and other gubbermint agencies.
Be vigilant in your redundancy. The more you repeat yourself, the more likely others will believe you!
If you can't find anyone as crazy as yourself to support you in the flamewars you start with the normal population, create sock puppets and use anonymous remailers that shamelessly hang on every word you write.
(17-Mar-05) When dealing with law enforcement, remember that it is they who have the problem, not you. Be sure to inform them of this at every available opportunity, as they will surely appreciate your constructive criticism. Be sure to make them aware that YOU KNOW YOUR RIGHTS! ("The cops like that, when people know their rights. That way they don't have to read them to you on the way to the station." - George Carlin)

The more your fake personalities adulate you, the more respect you'll get!
When confronted with a reality that you don't like: Announce loudly that you are departing, never to return as long as there's an Internet. Come back in three or four days and claim you were drunk, hacked, abducted by alience, or forged. Alternately you can just not even mention your prior departure, and if anyone asks you about it, either ignore them or respond with something along the lines of "YOUR NOT THE BOSS OF ME! PLONK!" People really know you mean business then.
Always remain clueproof.
(20-Mar-05) Anyone who does not believe that you are the reincarnation of [$DEITY_OR_PROPHET] is obviously an infidel lacking in faith whose soul in in peril of everlasting damnation.
When responding to one line challenges, post paragraphs of rants and screed in response.
Incoherency is not a roadblock to poasting.
Neither is illiteracy.
Delusions poasted often enough become fact.
Claim you will destroy <insert newsfroup> for attacking you.
When spnaked, send cmsg for Fanboi newsfroup(s).
Find your Lame, Use your Lame, Be your Lame!
Post Edit when the TRVTH hurts.
Always sneck the offending newsfroups.
Always poast pictures of yourself so you can be admired in all your k00ky glory.
Always accuse others of the very acts you are guilty of.
Post lots of boasts about your high IQ and incredible talents.
(20-Mar-05) If you repeat a lie often enough, it becomes the truth. Anybody who fails to understand this is engaged in a deliberate campaign of misinformation and character assassination.
Always <plonk> somebody just before replying the plonkee!
The k00k considers itself the most intelligent person in any conversation, possibly on the planet. Other people are benighted and ignorant, and have been waiting their whole lives for the k00k to rescue them from intellectual darkness.
Write a self-published book and claim it a success. Bonus points for comparing it to "Mein Kampf" and/or the Bible.
Declare yourself equal to a deity of your choice.
Claim that you've come from other planets.
Claim thousands of past lives.
Frothing complaints carry far more weight when you send them from "legal@" some domain.
Nothing strikes terror into the hearts of your detractors more than telling them that you're archiving their messages for possible use in the future.
Never forget that everyone else posting to Usenet is a paid disinformation agent looking to discredit you.

Usenet is governed by US law. If a poster in Romania killfiles you, he's obviously violating your 1st Amendment rights and can be sued.
Every news admin in the world hangs out in NANAU, and they're just dying to nuke the account of that meanyhead who just called you "fucknozzle". Drop 'em a line - that's what they're there for, after all.
AUK will be closed down. Just you wait and see.
They've nuked hundreds of accounts in the name of free speech and yours will be next.
The k00k will, without any trace of irony, lie, manipulate, impersonate, censor, and declare themselves powerful in ways ranging from the ability to have an account shut down to being God Herself, in order to convince people that they are not liars, manipulators, censors, or insane.
Abuse women while telling how many hundreds you've loved. Nevermind that you're one ugly motherfucker and that there were 30,000 femininas that thought you were a scumbag with bad teeth.
Remember that your ko0ky klaims are 'facts', and that 'facts' do not require proof.
Do not neglect to poast your responses to forums that the originator doesn't read. This will make the people in that forum very impressed with how you tear him to shreds without him being able to respond. They like it even better if you are off-topic for that forum.
Keep in mind that lack of evidence supporting your konspiracy theory actually _is_ evidence, of how effective the konspiracy is in hiding.
(06-Oct-05) When spanked, always retreat to the safety of the Ad Hominem.
(04-Aug-2005) When spanked mercilessly for days on end, proving with each poast just what an illiterate and ignorant fool you are, ALWAYS claim ownership of [person(s),froup(s)]. This works on so many levels. It inspires dread in your opponents that they will no longer be able to poast in their home froup and that they will eventually have to pay rent, to name just two.
Any problems with your poasts are the fault of the konspirators, who are trying to stop you from preventing the extinction of humanity.
Konspiracies that are able to subvert whole governments are always unable to silence konspiracy ko0ks.
The entire United States government is willing to spend millions of dollars for the sole purpose of harassing you.
Hollywood is making movies based on your personal life.
Do not consult psychiatrists or other mental health professionals. They are part of the konspiracy, and will sedate you and lock you away and keep you drugged if you tell them the truth.
Numerology and Astrology are respectable sciences and are useful for proving your case.
Everyone is Tim Hill, or David Green, or...
There is a fine line between trolling and kookery. Find that line and cross it repeatedly. When you are killfiled and/or LARTed for net.abuse as a result, claim victory. If you lose multiple accounts, this merely proves that you are indeed a world-class troll, with a black-belt in manipulation.

If you respond to every post someone else makes, they're obsessed. If they respond to less than 1% of your posts, they're even more obsessed.
Publishing people's real names, addresses, and phone numbers when there's no other way for you to come out of a flamewar with any dignity is cool, and proves that you are a master of secret internet information stores, and absolutely not to be fucked with.
Everyone is out to get you. You can put a stop to this by telling everyone that they're out to get you at every available opportunity.
You are the only sane one.
Those that give you a hard time about morally bankrupt things you yourself admit to are just persecutioners of the new inquisition.
Yelling in all caps and cursing at your detractors is debate. Your detractors laughing at you with sarcastic remarks is obvious anger and jealousy.
If doing something results in the loss of your account, legal hassles, or blunt trauma injury, do it again. It always works better the second time.

SAN FRANCISCO: It may be the ultimate SOS.

Morse Code is in distress.
.....
While the decision had been expected, some ham radio operators fear that their exclusive club has been opened to the unwashed masses
- and that the very survival of Morse Code is in question.
The demise of the Morse requirement, however, could be a boon for ham radio itself. After the FCC decision, demand for information about radio licenses surged from about 200 in a typical weekend to about 500, according to the American Radio Relay League, an organization representing ham radio operators.
"It's part of the dumbing down of America," said Nancy Kott, editor of World Radio magazine and a field representative for the Centers for Disease of Control and Prevention in Metamora, Michigan. "We live in a society today that wants something for nothing."

A female in a mostly male radio world, Kott is one of about 660,000 licensed ham operators in the United States and is the U.S. leader of Fists CW Club, an organization that calls itself the International Morse Preservation Society.

... So true, Ms. Kott...

And, FINALLY, neither will an autistic talent like "code tapping" assist one in gaining an amateur ticket. Finally, CW is consigned to the trash heap with sword swallowing--CW, a skill whose time has come, and gone ...

And, indeed, it could be stated that I am jealous of those who can tap code at high speed. However, it felt as if I was just learning it to get the ticket, would immediately attempt to forget it after, would certainly NEVER use it, and was darn "pi$$ed off" at being forced to do it just to get the dern ticket!!!

That banner ("Mission Accomplished") referred to the aircraft
carrier's mission, not the war itself. You should know that a war is composed of hundreds, if not thousands, of individual missions.
That carrier had just finished hers and was headed home.

The news media intentionally misrepresented that banner, and you fell
for it.

No 73 for you,
Jeff KH6O

Neither learning or using the Morse Code has ever been an "autistic talent" in any way, "John". It is a developed skill, like typing, shooting, batting, throwing or a myriad of other talents.

Sorry, "John", Morse Code is not being consigned to any trash heap. It is used daily in making thousands of contacts by radio amateurs.

Perhaps you just needed an attitude adjustment, "John". I learned it in its most fundamental form, by the sound of each letter, in Scouting. I learned higher speeds just in order to get an amateur ticket. I wasn't going to let anything stand in the way of my obtaining an amateur radio license. Finally, I used it, became better at it and enjoyed it. I've been enjoying its use for over 43 years now. I'll be enjoying it long after code testing goes away.

"Let's", "we license"? Are you involved in those things, "John"? Is there a licensing requirement for magazine editors?

Many things in this country have been totally dumbed down. Ms. Kott is right on the mark. Amateur radio has been being dumbed down over the past decade or two.

> Then let's see how she feels about "dumbing down."

How do you feel about it? Do you generally find that things are better after the amount of knowledge required to participate has been reduced?

Have you noticed how much better pro basketball has become now that traveling is not called?

It is certainly true that it is your fantasy, UnWiseman. You have a long history of thinking about homosexual acts, sexual acts between parents and children and sexual acts between animals and people.

I also know all the DSL companys in the surround area, and most of those are in Springfield, which is long distance. Because NONE of those people have any local phone numbers and are not in the local phone

What is your problem with Jews, UnWiseman? There aren't many around here. You'd have to schlep to Wheeling to see any.

You could drive up to the Temple some Saturday (in a car of which no one cares about make or color) and vent your feeling regarding Jews. I feel confident that a number of them would take time to discuss the issue with you.

Which yagi?

Most of 'em see the hides of other notorious CB scofflaws hanging on the side of the barn and give this place a wide berth.

I heard a couple of vanity callsigned newbies on 160m SSB last night.
They were discussing whether the low inverted vee or the low dipole of one of them was the better antenna for topband. I lump these characters with the guys who are using a tuner through 150 feet of coaxial cable to load a 75 meter dipole on 10m. They really don't know what they're missing.

Dave:

I know the answers to all which has gone on here ...

The point is some who are under-achievers have established a class system. They have sold the un-technical-minded that a ham ticket is the equivalent of a doctorate degree. Strangely, this class system ended up centered around CW (the one non-technical aspect of electronics (actually, has almost nothing to do with radio communications in its' present state and, indeed, having more to do with 'other skills.') They and others wish to keep amateur radio what it is today, a good old boys club who like the peace and quiet of the bands.

New comers will be a "burden." They will need to be brought up to speed (elmered if you like.) They will make mistakes, they will think they know it all (but some here already do that!) and have to learn new things, it will tax the patience of even saintly men and women. The FCC will finally have to start making sure sane rules are enforced for a larger population.

Amateur Radio is about to undergo a face lift and a painful rebirth into the new millennium ... These are truly exciting times to live in.

It is readily apparent from what you've written below that you do not know.

That's incorrect, "John". The under-achievers are those who want the testing dumbed-down. Those who can, do. Those who can't, whine.

> They have sold the un-technical-minded that a ham ticket is the > equivalent of a doctorate degree.

I know of not a single individual who has made such a statement. You and Len Anderson seem to believe that there are folks who have stated such. Neither of you has documented your claim.

> Strangely, this class system ended up > centered around CW (the one non-technical aspect of electronics > (actually, has almost nothing to do with radio communications in its'

There has been no class system centered around CW. The FCC implemented Incentive Licensing back in the late 1960's. One class of license--the Advanced--had no additional CW test over the General Class license. Only the Amateur Extra had an increase in CW speed as an additional test. Each class of licensing has increased theory and regulatory knowledge required.

> They
> and others wish to keep amateur radio what it is today, a good old boys > club who like the peace and quiet of the bands.

I disagree. The Good Old Boys will be the new entrants, those underachievers who could not be bothered to pass the previous exams. The bands are not now peaceful and quiet. Anyone who says otherwise isn't active on the air.

> New comers will be a "burden." They will need to be brought up to speed > (elmered if you like.) They will make mistakes, they will think they

Newcomers have always been a burden. They have always needed to be brought up to speed. They have always made mistakes and there have always been those who think they know it all. They have all had to learn new things and they have always taxed the patience of some. Newcomers of the past have been better prepared than newcomers of the future. Newcomers of today will be better prepared than newcomers of tomorrow. That is the direction of the country and that is the direction amateur radio is taking.

> The FCC
> will finally have to start making sure sane rules are enforced for a > larger population.

The FCC long ago abrogated its duty to enforce the regulations in the amateur bands. Riley Hollingsworth has taken steps to try to reverse that, but he doesn't have the staff to enforce the regs.

> Amateur Radio is about to undergo a face lift and a painful rebirth into > the new millennium ... These are truly exciting times to live in.

Vietnam was exciting. It wasn't necessarily pleasant.

The amateur bands will, for the foreseeable future, be much as they have been for decades. The same analog modes will predominate. We've seen an increase in some phone segments of some bands as re-farming of the old Novice bands has taken place. The dumbing-down of HF licensing has begun and there is already pressure to further dumb-down the written exams.

The real pressure will be on the phone bands. Those of us who favor CW will see little change.

The "greatness" you "hint" of simply does not exist anymore, amateur radios' day has come and gone, I think it needs a revival, and that may not even be possible, and if so, we need to face up to that too and dump amateur radio. The expense and trouble is simply not worth it to keep it alive for such a few to benefit from. We need thousands of new licenses, tens-of-thousands really.

To the old timers (and yes, I am 54, I just refuse to act 54!, dern it!) change is a frightening thing, let's face it, only babies like a change and they cry then!

The number of amateur tickets reflect that the "service" (more like hobby) is near death. The internet is a much better form of communication and satellites are a much better form of signal transmission, and much more dependable.

I don't like communication with "old fart hams" who key down for 15 minutes telling me all about themselves, their illness(s), their likes/dislikes and how things used to be in the early 1900's; and, mind you, I AM 54 YEARS OLD!, just imagine how all this sounds to preteens, teens and 20-50 year old "newbies" looking for a hobby!

It is time to hand the reins to a much younger generation of hams who must now mold it into something usable and desirable to them, what has gone before, what was in vogue before, what was popular before, what seemed important before--is no more ...

What has existed before will be no more ...

But, that is only one mans' opinion, time will tell now.

That's what people said when the FCC did the 2000 restructuring.

Guess what? No effect.

11k amateurs added between '00 and April '03. Since April '03, ARS has lost 32k amateurs.

This latest change will have about as much effect -- a fizzle -- because when push comes to shove, the 5wpm code test did not represent a significant barrier to entry to amateur radio, despite what the No-Code Agenda would like you to believe.

Nobody is 100% good or 100% bad. While Everett/Karenga has done some dastardly things (and deserves life in prison as far as I'm concerned), I think Kwanzaa is a really neat idea. He doesn't control it any more than the Catholic church controls Christmas.

I disagree. Now that the code test has been eliminated from amateur radio, it is my belief that members of the No-Code Agenda will start to attack the mode itself -- attempt to gather support to re-farm code and other non-voice mode allocations into voice.

The level of hatred and vitriol from that side of the aisle is quite staggering, IMO. Not only hatred of the mode itself, but hatred of the people who support it and like to use it. In my mind, it is a very disturbing mindset, and only promises to be more divisive in the short (and long) term.

I'm sure there are some LIDs who still rail on codeless techs. However, in my travels on HF and VHF, I have to say I've found very, very few who I would categorize as such. Most of the caustic comments I find are from codeless techs or slowcode licensees.

In the R&O, the FCC observed that there was no connection between morse code knowledge and compliance with the rules. The old 14.313 disaster was back in the days of 13 WPM and above coded hams. And VHF didn't turn into a CB mess since no code technician licenses started. And HF didn't get worse with 5WPM generals and extras. So as far as the FCC is concerned, they decided that there was no regulatory point in keeping element 1 in the tests. And the FCC isn't in the business of handing out merit badges. The whole point in requiring license testing is to be sure that people are at least aware of the responsibilities involved with transmitting RF into the radio spectra, that we do it in such a way that doesn't trash the spectrum for other users, ham and others. We then get permission to build, modify and so on transmitting equipment if we want to. CBers or FRSers are not supposed to do that.

As for newbies, virtually all new hams want to be accepted into our world, and will learn and adjust their operating habits as needed to be accepted. This has been true since day one, and aside from a few fools saying things like "No kids, no lids, and no space cadets" everyone knows what it was like to be a newbie.

So? For the last 20 years or so, it's been understood that no user speaks for their ISP, be it a subscription service or their company.

I agree. Let the bands now be allocated by use. If phone requires a larger segment, it goes there, if CW it goes there, if video/digital voice it goes there.

Like I say, because of past policy and the "damn the bands but save CW!"
crowd, it may be too late to save amateur radio ...

However, one thing is for REAL sure, hams will continue dieing off like flies--whether we can attract newbies to swell past numbers is the question of the hour.

One bright light in all this, some of my students will now go for their license. All colleges now need a program to make amateur radio known to their students, high schools are not too young to start with ...

Speaking as one who has been and is a practicing catholic, the church is NOT in love with xmas, indeed, the church is quick to point out that it draws attention away from the real importance of the time--the birth of Jesus ... but, as a catholic, xmas is ok to participate in and undoubtably, Jesus would approve of giving.

God damn newbie...not on Google we don't

These guys are just playing off each other. Nobody's actually being harmed EXCEPT THE REST OF US. They have the bizzarre idea that because "Mark/Morkie/whomever" supposedly came out as a bisexual amateur (not even a pro) that not only should this person be persecuted (a losing effort maybe) but ba.broadcast should be involved simply because they have a lot of gays there.

If anything, I always blame the legendary Usenet terrorist "Brian McCarty" who seems to be full of multi-personality harrassment schemes. He's a good scapegoat if ever one was needed.

If this thing were any more flimsy and transparent, privates could be seen.

Completely unrelated.

Even if people had gotten licensed decades ago, amateur radio as a hobby competes with many other things, some of which are much more technical and rewarding.

It isn't going to happen. Amateur Radio is a hobby of the past, the same way horseshoes are a hobby of the past.

None of my students express an interest in ham radio. The code requirement wasn't a significant barrier to entry for them anyway, since the tech license would yield all the privileges they require for working in the GHZ+ bands, where most of their interests (consumer electronics) lay.

As much as you wish you could will your skewed perception of reality into existance for others, the fact of the matter is you're simply wrong.

Amateur radio appeals to a very narrow segment of society.

These days, ragchewing on a 2m repeater or 20m SSB or CW frequency -- which is by far what the vast majority of people who are licensed hams actually engage in -- simply isn't appealing to society these days.

When I was a kid, it was a big deal to pick up the phone and call someone in California. It was "cool" if I could do it on the radio. Now... no big deal, the call is even 'free' on my cell phone. Heck, I do not even have a home phone any longer -- only a cell phone.

The "magic" of what was once amateur radio has long since left the hobby. And, it had nothing to do with CW, in as much as you'd like to hate the mode, hate the people who use it, and blame it for all the world's ills.

That is difficult to believe. Most young men with engineering interests
"goof about" with electronic transmitters of one sort or another. Old police/public service rigs, microwaves, old amateur equip., military equipment, modified cb equip., wireless nic cards, etc., etc.

Lots of guys who retired from Livermore Labs retired here because of reasonable property prices. Some of them serve as instructors, those guys have a really great effect on the young men and women here.
Several are hams ...

Don't slap the old guys too hard. They are the only ones with time available to go into the schools and recruit the young. The rest of us have to earn a living. Many of us work days and simply cannot go into the schools. The ones who work nights have to sleep in the day. So it will be counterproductive to alienate the older guys and gals. If you want programs in the schools, it would behoove you to start recruiting the older amateurs to do it.

I wonder if ol Nancy got her ticket back when everyone made their own equipment at home (the start of dumbing down of America must have been when hams started to by radios from the radio store).Or did she get her ticket back when you had to draw circuits
as part of the test.That not drawing circuits must have been the real beginning of dumbing down.What a brain stem.

I see the world though other glasses. Is is not the medium which is no longer useful. However, much of the practices, methods, uses and people who were/are in amateur have outlived their time. I trust the youth to change amateur into a new world, much as computers have done with electronics on a whole. How many hams do you know who even have a pci card sw receiver in their computers? How many hams build pci cards to interface with their computers for amateur uses? How many hams write articles in the radio rags on how to do computer/radio xmitters/rcvrs, projects? How many could?

We need the next generation which can ... the computer age has bypassed OT hams :(

Must be unique to your area. None of the young engineers I knew ever had any interest in "goofing about" with transmitters.

Again, I'd say likely to be unique to your area. None of my instructors ever mentioned or indicated in any way that they were hams.

no I suspect it is result of the aittude of those exposing the young engineers

I have no trouble JS has no trouble but enither of US values the Morse Code the way you do and that other poster does this sugests that NoCoders are good for ham radio and ProCoders are bad for it agreed the sample here is too small but the experiment seems to replicate braodly with the same results

Hi Jim and the few others that can still post a mmessage in RRAP that indicates some common sense, logic and respect.

Hey, a close second... :-)

Who'd a thought the FCC would footdrag as long as they did.

How about a pool on when the inmates running the RRAP asylum will finalkly wear themselves out. I can't believe these characters have the time which they devooote to their infintile and sophmoric postings.

Cheers to the goodguys like Jim who have stuck it out.

These things have been done in one way or another. That isn't new technology by any stretch of the imagination. So why get excited about it?
Perhaps it was exciting 10 years ago when these things were being done but not now. It just does not enhance the operating experience by any appreciable amount.

Just two points. One, my wife assures me that she is 100% good. Two, the Catholic Church does control Christmas and receives a royalty every time the word is used commercially. That is why Catholics like Bill O'Rielly are so upset with the use of "Holiday" instead of Christmas.

Perhaps 20-35 year old guys can make real contact with the youth and influence them, older that that, forget it.

Personally, I just work on supplying them with fuel for their minds to burn ... I have a rig on campus with a "miracle microvert antenna", it is a real conversation starter I find--and NO, I didn't ask permission

My 2 cents on this....
Code has been on it's way out for a long time. With all the new modes it is hard to require code and not the others.
Being a new ham myself, I found the 5wpm easy, to tell the truth 5wpm is harder than 15wpm to me. Sometimes you can go too slow...
One thing that I have a problem with in the general written test is the lack of proper operating procedures. I had no Elmer's for HF so the only way I learned was by listening and making a few embarrassing mistakes that I was corrected on with no lack of teasing. I wont say what was said but lets say there is a wide gap between 2 meters and HF.

BTW I can repair my TS-400s and I run all my rigs off of solar power and battery storage. I am not an idiot but have found that the more I learn about ham radio, the more questions I have.
I just wish that there were more people out there like all of you, that takes the time to help out the newbie's like me. I am a 45 year old newbie.
One more note..I was able to help out the EOC in Gulfport Mississippi, after hurricane Katrina shortly after getting my technicians license. I was down there for work and donated my spare 2m rig. So I guess I am proof that even a newbie can help out when it counts.

You are so busy deciding what they are, and what they are not (the next hams) that I doubt you could get a real one to pay attention to you.

If all else fails, ignite their imaginations and get out of their way!

I find underneath it all, these young men and women are just like I was when younger. I just had access to so much more, like cheaply available military equip., tubes, xmitters and parts of all sorts--it seemed as though it was everywhere. No one ever stopped me from firing up tesla coils with neon sign transformers and spark gaps driving their primaries, or building vlf osc's to drive them. Heck, we could even go skinny dipping in the river ... but I digress here.

We have changed, times have changed, laws have changed, "they" haven't changed ... anyone who strives to change "them" has already lost the battle ... now, we CAN encourage them to better efforts and expenditures of their energies. What is the fun of an ipod when you can see 18" corona discharges and smell the ozone?

The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. There has never been any "Morse Requirement." No particular mode is mandated.

That would make it "IMPS." I thought it called itself "FISTS."

I'm not so easily convinced, Stefan.

I doubt it. Al the no coders cared about was removing element 1 from the tests. If some hams want to do a CW net or contest, have at it, have fun. Just pick a frequency not in use according to band plan.

I wouldn't say never... occasionally I get a student who will express an interest in some of our marine transmission gear, from a technical standpoint, but I would say 99.99% of the 'interest' in it would be classified as 'operational use'. In fact, I can only recall 1 person in the past 3 years who has asked anything technical about the electronics gear.

Very close - but each day it gets closer to AB2RC's date.

Not me! Heck, my second predicted date was almost a year ago, and my first prediction almost three years ago.

When the treaty changed way back in 2003, the announcement on the ARRL website said the process could take as long as two years. I thought that was way too long. Turns out it's already more than 3-1/2 years!

The moderated version of rrap will come on line soon. That will be a different game entirely.

I suspect that, given the recent "omnibus" R&O and the code test R&O, we will not see more changes to Part 97 for a long time.

Thanks, but my time here is limited. I'll continue to post the ARS license numbers and make some occasional comments, but the noise level is so high that I read perhaps 2% of what is posted to rrap.

MARQUEER is in this order:

1:A person that makes your life as hard as possible.
2:A person that will stand in your way, and mess anything up you do.
3:A person that only cares for them self, and no one else!
4:A person that is looking to give one trouble.

Marqueer is a real Cocksucker.

Marqueer performs or has performed fellatio on dogs.

Marqueer was a cocksucker.

Hey Marqueer,Fuck off you worthless cocksucker!

Marqueer gives head.
Marqueer enjoys Giving blowjobs to niggers.

SEARCH = /MARQUEER/>>>>>>>>RESULTS::::::::::::::::::::

1. Someone who sucks a man's penis.
2. A very stupid person.

1. Because I saw Marqueer suck DrDeath's penis I knew that Marqueer is a cocksucker.
2. That fucking DrDeath cocksucker gave Marqueer money for a head job.

MARQUEER is predictably unreliable and will fuck up whatever he is attempting to do--especially while doing something for another person.

That cocksucker Marqueer couldn't drive five miles without getting lost.

MARQUEER is in this order:

1:A person that makes your life as hard as possible.
2:A person that will stand in your way, and mess anything up you do.
3:A person that only cares for them self, and no one else!
4:A person that is looking to give one trouble.

Marqueer is a real Cocksucker.

Marqueer performs or has performed fellatio on dogs.

Marqueer was a cocksucker.

Hey Marqueer,Fuck off you worthless cocksucker!

Marqueer gives head.
Marqueer enjoys Giving blowjobs to niggers.

MARQUEER; Also see homo- fag- faggot- shiteating- cocksucking- queen

Ex: 1, Dude I saw Marqueer suck DrDeath's cock.
2, FUCK YOU YOU MARQUEER COCKSUCKER

1.MARQUEER performs fellatio on DrDeath.

2. MARQUEER licked and sucked DrDeath's cock until DrDeath nearly fainted with pleasure.

Europe goes only by band plans and they are not observed or followed during contests. Do we really want that here?

At what point is the potential Ham Dumb and wanting something for nothing?

Was it when they lowered the requirement to 5 wpm for all license classes? Speaking of 5wpm, were all Novices dumb and looking for something for nothing? And were Generals and advanced just dumb enough, and just looking for something for almost nothing?

I'm just about at the point of thinking that Morse CW use will increase after the test requirement goes away.

I wonder what type of antennas the new dumb hams will use - just to bring this on topic, since it's crossposted to an rraa.

Implementing logic, I'd venture a guess the CDC has an outreach program in SF. SF has a major segment of the queer population in America, the aids disease is out of hand.

Although aids is insignificant when compared to cancers death toll and there IS a cure for aids, tons of money gets thrown at it while cancer goes wanting.

If I was forced to venture a guess further, I'd almost bet Ms. Kott is a lesbian (that is just a personal opinion and guess!) I am almost always leery of lesbians, too often we end up in competition over the same women, and they get angry if they lose!

And, I'd suspect (I never have checked) the amount of male licensees must out number female licensees 10:1 or better, heck it could be 100:1; If it is as I suspect, Ms. Kott is a lesbian, what better hobby to find if you are into male bashing? (she'd just love to make a bunch of "dumbed down hams" out of the amateur population)

JS

Good day,
The lower parcel shelf is glued on.
The aforementioned clips are in place as mentioned in the previous locationions.I have not had not much success removing the lower parcel schelf without destroying it ! I have tried heat and solvents to remove several of mine... But they just got F%&*ed up in the process and needwe to be replaced outright.

What kinda Ham radio do you do Michael? Buy a rig, and pay someone to install it and put up your tower? Your statement is unusual to say the least. What hobbies are more technical?

I'm using my Christmas vacation to learn Visual Studio, so that I can program Ham apps. I build as much of my own equipment as possible, and find it all intensely rewarding.

Judging from your other posts, I'd guess that you are simply tired of Amateur radio, and for some reason, you find it interesting to stir up the ants nest from time to time.

Are you going to allow your license to expire so that the hobby won't be annoying you any more?

I would expect that. Most IT people, computer support folks, and programmers (especially) I work with are quite simply not technically inclined at all.

Hey Jim,

Since I started using Xnews, rrap is nice and clean.

I'm curious about the "moderated" version of rrap. Will it be fun enough for the members? I've seen enough in here to know that part of the fun is in the namecalling. Even if one doesn't engage in it, they probably get something out of it. It just got way out of hand the past year.

And regarding the pool, I still say let's not call it finished until its finished.

Have a great New Year!

No you don't. You have forgotten that the law requires your local telco to make its lines available for outside DSL providers to use. That means you have many more options than just the local guys when you want to sign up for broadband service.

In a pinch, you could sign up with direcpc and use satellite broadband the way that Markie does. He abuses these newsgroups regularly, and direcpc still lets the slime ball get away with it. Steve could never TOS you if you signed up with direcpc, whose advertising slogan is "We don't give a damn."

So stop the nonsense about having no broadband. We all know better.

I didn't call it finished. I simply said that AB2RC looks like the winner.

If the effective date is July 2, 2007, you and AB2RC will be tied.
After that date, you'll be the frontrunner.

But July is a ways off. Even if it takes FCC 60 days to get the R&O in the Federal Register, and even if the rules don't become effective until 60 days after that, we're still talking late April or so. I think it will happen a lot sooner.

The really interesting thing will be how the license numbers will be affected.

4214. Change in ARS numbers

My prediction is that on the one year anniversary of the implementation that the total numbers of of ARS licenses (excluding the categories that N2EY excludes for consistency) will not differ from the numbers on the implementation date by more than 1% either direction (plus or minus).

Anyone else? You can pick either "+" or "-" or "+/-". It must also be a whole percentage not a fraction.

N8UZE, +/- 1%

In addition, it is my belief that "growth" won't really occur until the "cell phone substitute" hams have let their license expire. Although cell phones have been around for awhile now, they didn't really get affordable on a family basis until roughly the year 2000. So that means little to no growth until roughly the year 2010 in my opinion. At that time we will also see the last of the Novice licenses virtually disappear as they will either have upgraded or allowed their license to lapse. There may be a few that continue to renew at that level but it will be few and far between.

one years Id guess you are right althought Id guess the uncertainly is more -+ 3 since the main brake I see to growth is the death of the OT going sk becuase growth has been postponded too long added to the fact it will take awhile to get news out and over the not sure when the tipping point that will allow real growth to occour

Let's spell it out:

One calendar year after Element 1 is completely removed as a US amateur license requirement, the change in the number of current, unexpired amateur radio licenses issued by FCC will be the following:

N8UZE: Between 1% less and 1% more N2EY: Between 1% more and 2% more

When the change becomes effective, my postings to "ARS License Numbers" will include comparisons to the effective date.

I think the loss of "honeydew hams" will be more gradual.

Around here, their numbers really became significant in the early 1980s. Some went on to become much more involved in amateur radio, others did not.

And IMHO, cell phone prices really began to drop about 1995 or so.

There were probably other effects from changes in the test requirements, etc.

What all this means is that the expiration dates will be all over the map. And not all will simply let the license expire, because it's so easy to renew.

The AH0A website has listings of new and renewed licenses per month.
Will be interesting to see how those numbers change, too.

It has been six years and eight months since FCC stopped issuing new Novice and Advanced licenses. In that time, we've seen a much more dramatic drop in the number of Novices than in the number of Advanceds.
Whether that is due to expirations or upgrades is a good question.

In the case of Novices, however, the number is far above what would be expected if the licenses were all simply expiring. Perhaps some Novices are renewing with the idea of upgrading "someday".

Still the Novice drop is pretty steep. Either way, I think the drop will be pretty much done by 2010 one way or another. The "cell phone substitute" hams are a little harder to get a handle on. In 1995, I knew a fair number of people who had them BUT only one, not one for each family member. Of course this could have varied in different parts of the country. Again, I think that drop will be pretty much done by 2010 also. It could be earlier though and that would be a good thing. I selected 2010 as a conservative point in time in my opinion.

Back 30 years ago, at Syracuse University, the ham club offered to send Valentine's Day messages to students with boy or girl friends at other colleges. This was a big hit, made students a little aware of ham radio, and also was useful come student government club funding time. Of course, this was before the Internet was commonly known about, and all there was was snail mail or very expensive long distance phone calling.

Speroni doesn't have final figures for December. Using November as a baseline, there are 657k hams.

Since April '03 (43 months) there has been a net loss of 30k hams, or roughly 700/mo.

A 1% loss would be 6600. 700*12=8400. Or, 1.25%

I would conclude that, on the face, your guess is probably accurate. I would guess more 0 to -1%. I doubt you will see a positive 1% growth.

I do not think you will see any "growth" at all.

I think numbers will continue to decline, and then "bottom out" at a minimum number. Once that point is reached, the number will remain relatively the same, +/- a few thousand, depending on renewal/expiration cycles. I do not think you will see this happen until sometime around 2012.

(06-Jun-05) Obviously, since you have your own fan group, this must mean that you have fans. Post prolifically to your fan group - you wouldn't want to disappoint them!
(10-May-2005)Everyone reads usenet. Approval here means approval everywhere.
Post numerous blank posts, or posts containing only a message id.
Post numerous copy&paste web articles from crackerpot websites.
Never forget to call kookologists "k00ks."
If there are several, call them "sockpuppets" too
When all else fails, accuse various and sundry kookologists of e-mailing viruses to you. This is a sure-fire method of garnering sympathy and ensuring that the General Public will always see things your way. An especially effective sub-strategy here is to accuse them of infecting you with the 'Sasser' worm via e-mail.
Quote notorious scientists or writers - it makes it look as if they approve the drivel you are writing!
(9-Jul-05) Anytime your computer is infected with a virus, bogged down by spyware, attacked over your internet connection, or otherwise suffers from preventable problems, government agencies are responsible and are trying to silence you and are monitoring your computer files.

Be vigilant in your redundancy. The more you repeat yourself, the more likely others will believe you!
If you can't find anyone as crazy as yourself to support you in the flamewars you start with the normal population, create sock puppets and use anonymous remailers that shamelessly hang on every word you write.

This works on so many levels. It inspires dread in your opponents that they will no longer be able to poast in their home froup and that they will eventually have to pay rent, to name just two.
Any problems with your poasts are the fault of the konspirators, who are trying to stop you from preventing the extinction of humanity.
Konspiracies that are able to subvert whole governments are always unable to silence konspiracy ko0ks.
The entire United States government is willing to spend millions of dollars for the sole purpose of harassing you.

There is a fine line between trolling and kookery. Find that line and cross it repeatedly. When you are killfiled and/or LARTed for net.abuse as a result, claim victory. If you lose multiple accounts, this merely proves that you are indeed a world-class troll, with a black-belt in manipulation.
If you respond to every post someone else makes, they're obsessed. If they respond to less than 1% of your posts, they're even more obsessed.
Publishing people's real names, addresses, and phone numbers when there's no other way for you to come out of a flamewar with any dignity is cool, and proves that you are a master of secret internet information stores, and absolutely not to be fucked with.
Everyone is out to get you. You can put a stop to this by telling everyone that they're out to get you at every available opportunity.
You are the only sane one.
Those that give you a hard time about morally bankrupt things you yourself admit to are just persecutioners of the new inquisition.
Yelling in all caps and cursing at your detractors is debate. Your detractors laughing at you with sarcastic remarks is obvious anger and jealousy.

bad proff oh that is is right you are an INstructor one the requirement in order to give someone an F is enrolling in your coruse

as I have credit with a number of of calculu course though the graduate level (were required for my undergrad physics degree) why would I enroll in a new one Jeff

When I first read that, 2010 seemed a long long way off.

Now I realize it's only three years!

Yup. Main point it that it's not some hard-line date, but a gradual effect.

yep and that was likely his problem one year ago today he shot his keybaord off and wrote checks that he could not cash

I would sue him if I could mange 1 of 2 things: finding anything of Steves worth taking, or a way to pin something on a co ddefenat that could pay

I can't yet find a way to do either but My lawyer looks into it on the Rules:

1) Predict amount of change in ARS numbers between the IMPLEMENTATION date of the R&O for elimination of code testing and one year from that date.
2) Calculation of the number of licenses will be done by N2EY under the same principals that he uses now to calculate the number of licenses.
3) You must select whole numbers for your percentage.
4) You may select positive or negative percentages.
5) You may select a range but that range may not exceed a total of 4%. Note that your average will be used to determine who is closest. If the actual change is outside the range of everyone's guesses then the person whose limit is closest will be the winner.
6) You must submit your guess no later than six months after the IMPLEMENTATION date of the R&O.

Guesses submitted:

N8UZE: 1% less to 1% more
N2EY: 1% more to 2% more
KH6HZ: 1% less to 0% change.

Anyone else? Note if your guess doesn't show up on the list within a week, it may mean that my ISP is blocking it or that you are on my blocked senders list. You may still participate but you will have to have your guess submitted by someone who is not blocked.

I guess no one cares that Stefan come on here bitchin and moaning and crying about the "dumbing down" of USA amateur radio, and he has no apparent license.

How easily everyone gets fooled by these trolls.

That's right. And there's no requirement to get on the air once you do have a license.

You're right.

That's exactly right. That's why it was so important to keep the Morse Code exam, because the written exams are nothing.

You have to hand it to him! He did a good job declaring his views ragarding ham radio ande he may be right. Ham radio is shurely on the downslide and we can't blaim that on the FCC. We have the internet now that welcomes everybody so it wouldn't hurt us if the FCC gave somebody else the frequencies. We talk of public service well looking at this newsgroups work it would be better for the whole world if America got off the bands because we are not liked anymore and this newsgroup does not do service to America other than showing who we really are.

funny Tom not on welfare at all

Direct Pc does require a bit more upfront than some nor does it advertise we don't a dammn "lloyd"

but a lot of houses in Taylorville would not have a decent LoS to I know the town having dated a gal from there once upon a time

Skip VB.NET and C++, learn C#. Lots of good books on the .NET Framework out there too. Sams, Sybex, Addison Wesley.

That's an odd observation, considering I've made perhaps a half-dozen postings to this newsgroup in the past year, almost all of which deal with my beliefs as to what will happen to raw licensing numbers as a result of the Element 1a elimination. Do you somehow feel threatened by my stated beliefs that the change will have little if any statistical effect on licensing numbers?

Odd, I do not recall ever stating ham radio annoyed me. Perhaps you have my postings confused with someone else.

Almost all of my "hobbies" these day revolve around activities and "hobbies" where I can spend time with my two youngest children.

You can blame Bill Gates for that.

No he is being realistic. We have more CB sets out there than ham sets and they are no different to hams. If there is an emergency then CB ers would probably do a better job than hams and with less quibling. I think the writing is on the wall for ham radio since they dont provide a thing for the country It would be better if home security took over the frequency as we all now use the net instead. Have you heard anybody on the radio lately if you get my drify

Steve Robeson (k4YZ) and Roger Wismen (AB8MQ) and others have been enged in the last few years in a near constant barrage of posts forging MY name

and deperatly trying to spread that Impresonation" all over the web

Me niether these 2 clowns seem to think somehow that My sexuality has something to with wether (of all things Morse Code should contiued to be tested as part of Ham radio licenses) that and they fact I fooled when one of them (robeson) tried blackmailing me about my sexaulity something I tend not to bring up but don't hide either

No, Brian Burke, I'm not kidding. I was permitted to bypass military tech school because I passed exams which demonstrated that I knew the relevant material. It was very much like challenging a university course and it was something long-offered by the Air Force. Weren't you given such an opportunity?

I've never ignored my license privileges at any time, Brian.

How do you feel about the "new" pro basketball game?

To those of us who entered the Big Leagues of HF Radio over a half century ago, the "AUTISTIC TALENT" metaphor DOES have CORRECT merit. That it bugs the shit out of you is just too band, ainit? :-)

Note: "Metaphor" is NOT the same as "semaphore."

If you don't like others waving a metaphor around, TS on
you. It ain't no crime.

Really? I thought RADIOS were needed first...?

You mean that ALL one needs is closing and opening a circuit in the proper morse manner? Wow! What a mode!

Tell us what OTHER radio services still use morse code for communications. [that should be easy...there ain't none] Maritime radio was the first biggie user of radio and nowadays they use Voice and Data...Voice on VHF in harbors and inland waterways, on HF SSB on open ocean. Maritimers began with morsemanship because that's all they had back in the prehistory of radio. That changed. Maritimers tossed morsemanship in the trash heap, the dumpster (those are more metaphors, Dave, don't get all hissy fit on it).

Even the US CG stopped monitoring 500 KHz years ago.

>Perhaps you just needed an attitude adjustment, "John". I learned it in >its most fundamental form, by the sound of each letter, in Scouting.

Wow! In Scouting! Oh, my, I was never in the Scouts.
My uniform was REAL and the first duty was "closing with and destroying the enemy." <shrug>

Never learned any morsemanship in the Army...they weren't teaching it to anyone but Field Radio MOS students then.
The US Military dropped morsemanship requirements for military communications decades ago...

>I learned higher speeds just in order to get an amateur ticket.

"Ticket?" To what? Ride the airwaves? See a performance of some "No kids, no lids, no space cadet" morseman? To see a sporting event featuring Nancy Kott (in golden gloves) up against a no-coder? :-)

I never had to learn any morsemanship in 1952, 1962, 1972, 1982, 1992, 2002...for work or play. <shrug>

I got a Commercial radio operator license (First Class right from the start) in 1956...a half century ago (plus a half year).
Helped get me started in Real radio (not with a bunch of amateurs), earning a living and having lots of fun doing the work.

I'd already worked three years on spanning the Pacific Ocean on HF. With Big radio equipment. Amateur stuff would somehow "teach me" such things via a federal amateur license?

>I wasn't going to let anything stand in the way of my obtaining an amateur radio >license.

Wow! Big Dave doesn't let ANYTHING stand in HIS way! :-)

Big Dave is the Mighty Macho Morseman...unstoppable in his refusual to recognize others having a different opinion than his godly wisdom...

>Finally, I used it, became better at it and enjoyed it. I've >been enjoying its use for over 43 years now.

How lovely! Something (finally) you are good at...and now you want to keep forcing the code test on ALL newcomers wanting below-30-MHz operating privileges!

So, whatever YOU enjoy is what EVERYONE ELSE should "enjoy?"

>I'll be enjoying it long after code testing goes away.

Again, how lovely! Mighty Macho Morseman rides again with the Four Morsemen of the Apocalypse!

["into the valley of dearth rode the four hundred..."]

I'll bet Big Dave will be "enjoying" morse long after he has assumed room temperature... :-)

The Coroner will have to pry the code key from his cold, dead fingers. Tsk, all that work imposed on government officials...

Horrors! Isn't Ham Radio ALL about "working DX on HF with CW?"

Why...why...why one HAS to "get on the air" and "work" someone by morsemanship! "Rite of passage" or some other BS myth...

One just "cannot" be a "ham" without "working someone with CW!"

Riiiiight...the ultimate, the ne plus ultra of "radio

"FISTS" carries the emotional baggage of Virility, Strength, Force, and is very Manly. :-)

Hmmm...that alone makes one wonder about Ms. Kott's motivation?

[now watch the response, Brian, Jimmie Noserve will be in here with a "you're Wrong" and describe the origin of "FISTS" and other assorted glories of morsemanship...as if He is the only "smart" one and all no-coders are imbeciles]

One can only wonder.

Maybe this Stefan is really Mikey Deignan trying to get some new Club Calls to replace the ones taken away from him? :-)

If there's anything other than politics and Morse code to argue about, especially in RRAP, it must be all the disgusting garbage offered by the resident lunatics and the 45-year long rant that would even turn the stomachs of the gay people they malign.

Certainly you have a thread about the best new gear that became available this year or the best influence on the hobby.

At least I cannot get these "posters" if I read a printed radio magazine.

I submit that many entered the "Big Leagues of HF Radio" about the same time as you. You are but one of them. You are the only one of them comparing learning the Morse Code to an "AUTISTIC TALENT". As with so many other things you've written here, you are in error. Typing in capital letters and adding a "Tsk, tsk" here and there don't make your views true.

Leonard, I have little doubt that once all of the smoke clears away, you'll still be attempting to open the box containing your Extra Class amateur radio license.

Your juvenile behavior is showing, Leonard.

If that's what you come away with after reading a sentence which includes the words "by radio amateurs", so be it.

It is then peculiar that I'm still hearing aviation beacons which use Morse Code. I hear utility stations in the HF bands using Morse Code for two way communication. That aside, I have little interest in the modes other radio services use. I'm concerned with those which are used in the service in which I am an active participant, amateur radio.

What's it to you, Len? Amateur radio still uses Morse Code. You aren't a radio amateur and you aren't likely to be one.

None of those things are amateur radio. I made a number of 160m contacts last night with Nordic and Russian radio amateurs. We used CW.
I do hope that's okay with you. Perhaps we should have thought to check. No one involved had tossed the Morse Code into any dumpster.

My Cub Scout and Boy Scout uniforms were very real. One could see and touch them. We didn't receive any instructions on closing with and destroying any enemy.

Come to think of it, I never received any instructions from the Air Force about my duty to close with and destroy any enemies. In your time in the Army, did you ever close with and/or destroy any enemy, Len? I'd love to have you tell that story about what it is like to undergo an artillery barrage. Did that really happen to you or did you make it up?

That's good, Len. I never received any Morse Code training in the Air Force either, though I passed a Morse Code receiving test as a part of my Bypassed Specialist exams.

What has that to do with amateur radio, Len? I'm no longer in the military. Are you?

You know, Leonard, that is exactly what it was.

One could be treated to that by just tuning a receiver. No license was required. The W2 who uttered those now-famous words was a phone man.

I'd say this is a good time for all the good 'ole boys to remain silent, just as some are showing the intelligence and doing.

The FCC made it clear that they recognize that code was being used as a method to control the numbers of amateurs allowed 'in.' Seems as if someone in the FCC even found the male organs big enough to face up to the "crimes" which were being committed against "John Doe Citizen" in depriving of access to radio with insanity.

It is funny. It now stands obvious, selfish and self-centered hams became to believe the lies which they were spouting to maintain such a corrupt scheme, now they have grown blind and spout on making fools of themselves. Even, going to the lengths to argue against stone cold logic--nothing short of amazing.

It just goes to show you the dangers, act like an idiot long enough and you become one!

Sure it will. I long ago promised I would have a QSO using CW if the test was abolished. That's at least one additional QSO.

I think after the dust settles the big issue will be grandfathering Novices and Advanceds to the next class up, i.e. tidying up the licence scheme. and of course I still want more phone on 40, 20 and 15, but it will be a while before the FCC will get back to these things. Maybe petitions on these things would be dismissed if they were filed right now, but later on they might succeed.

IOW, there are other outstanding issues, but IMHO things are moving in the right direction.

I do wonder why this took 3 1/2 years. Maybe the large number of petitions (18) and comments (zillions) had something to do with it. Maybe even Riley had something to do with delaying it? Does he have that much influence?

I'd say we will get more Generals, including some who are new hams, and a few new Techs. There are definitely some Techs who are no longer active due to cellphones, but as long as they remain licenced it doesn't affect the question.

There is definitely a problem in that you can no longer get test manuals in Radio Shack, or in any other store AFAIK. I tried to buy a General book for my XYL yesterday, but couldn't.

My vote is 2-6% increase.

No, you and Lloyd seem to have sheep on the mind as sex partners, but at least you have a shemale wife while Lardass Lloyd has sheep, huh, Markie.

A rather odd statement.

How does one measure "code usage"?

It went "up" compared to what?

It went "up" according to one observer who somehow could simultaneously monitor all bands everywhere in the UK? Do you also count the code usage of DX stations communicating with all UK hams or do you only count the UK side of the QSO's? What was the actual amount of code usage prior to and then after the elimination of the requirement? How do you express a unit of code usage? (dits + dahs)/sec/Hz * unit time?

That's what ended your time in Basic, Markie. Sodomy, not the 2 pounds overweight you claimed, anyways the only two pounds extra you carried is when the guy was in the act of sodomizing you.

Hey Len, you've been flaming code on these groups since at least 1996...I can still remember when you got on the rec.radio groups the first time. Somehow, as a brilliant electronics engineer you were never able to master the skill of sending and receiving letters represented as dits and dahs and this kept you off HF...but you always had vastly superior academic skills in the field of RF that fact seemed to make the skill of simple Morse communication seem so irrelevant in today's modern world.

Now you no longer need that skill and the doors have swung open. Does that mean you will make yourself and your brilliant mind available to the unwashed masses of hams who only know how to pound keys? Will you now be getting your extra class and dazzling us with new ideas and inventions that will forever modernize the amateur modes, you know, the sort of achievements you always said would be possible if only they got rid of that nasty Morse test?

We will all be waiting Len.

As adamant as the FCC has been on this, it's very doubtful that grandfathering will ever happen. They've made it plain that they consider it reasonable for people to pass the written tests for the upgrades. In addition, at the rate the Novice licenses are decreasing they will be all but gone in less than 10 years anyway.

You may be somewhat right on the phone issue. Actually though I would expect to see them try the band plan approach (ala Europe) rather than the regulatory approach. Bad thing here is that it will be a major issue on a contest day as the contest ops will expand to fill the whole band instead of just part of the band for any given contest as they do now.

I'm firmly convinced that the number of petitions was a major hang-up on processing this. Each petition had a slightly different spin and each had a significant number of comments. The FCC staff had to digest all this and come to an agreement on just what approach would be taken.

Both sides of the argument have hurt ham radio. Both sides told major lies. Those who said code was a "lid filter, "right of passage", etc were wrong. Those who maintained code was too hard for the average person, outmoded, being used to control the numbers, etc were wrong. BOTH SIDES played to emotionalism.

It will take a lot of work to repair the damage caused by those on both sides who used false arguments.

I wouldn't say so. He saved the military the expense of training him on material that he already knew. And having the ham license probably was enough evidence for the trainers to allow him to take the challenge exams, which he'd then have to pass to confirm that he did in fact know his stuff. Not like he just showed them his ham license and get waived thru. The point is not "How much work did you do", but "how much material do you now know".

I've added your guess to the list.

I hope that your prediction is correct. But since the non-hams I have talked to about ham radio don't know what the requirements for a license are, they are not apt to jump into ham radio because the code test was dropped. Most of them glaze over at the mention of a license and we never even get to the requirements.

I expect that most of the active Techs will upgrade to General or even Extra. Beyond that, I don't expect to see much change.

Over the long haul, I don't expect much change. Compared to other countries, we actually have a fairly high percentage of people who have ham licenses. Other than Japan, most countries have around 0.1% (or less) of their population licensed. We have about 0.2% which puts us very high on the list. I would expect our ham population numbers to stabilize but wouldn't make any guesses as to what that number will be.

I'd really like to use a longer baseline for this pool but I don't think very many of us are really up for a 5 or 10 year pool.

I think this symptomatic of the real issue. Our field don't get enough exposure to the general public and materials on it are hard to come by unless you already know that ham radio exists and you use the internet to find study materials.

Perhaps in some ways. Keep in mind that in having passed it, you now know that you are able to learn this. Therefore should you wish to go further with this aspect of amateur radio in the future, you will have the confidence to tackle it and get it into usable shape. This gives you a great advantage over those that listened to the bull about it being "too hard" and thus were afraid to try and will probably continue to be afraid to try.

No you can't. There was no Stefan Wolfe here in 1996. And there is no amateur radio license issued to Stefan Wolfe.

Is that what's been keeping you off of HF? No license is issued to Stefan Wolfe.

Odd, but Len has been on HF through SHF. All without code.

Len's knowledge of RF had nothing to do with it (sorry Len). Morse Code became irrelevant all by itself.

There are no unwashed masses of hams. Maybe there are a few individuals at hamfests that might pay more attention to personal hygeine, but no masses.

Joe, it doesn't. There are lots of 20WPM Code-Tape Extras - who've never had a single CW contact in their lives and never will. If a ham must be judged, judge him or her on their conduct and value that they add to the service.

Of course, your question is rhetorical and nobody knows if you are a good amateur, or a bad one, or what it might take to make you a better one.. Your might be a 75m late night quarmer or you might have provided significant radio communications for rescuers during the San Farncisco earthquake. Who knows?

Passing the code test used to simply increase one's qualifications; it obviously did not in itself make one a better practitioner of the service. Now ,of course, passing code has no meaning at all; it is similar to Cecil Moore having passed the mensa test.

Did passing mensa make Cecil a better engineer?

You betcha, but, as far as I can find, the ONLY one who posted a photo essay (20 pages worth) about it on the Internet. See:

http://sujan.hallikainen.org/BroadcastHistory/My3Years.pdf

So, how do you feel that a station with 40+ transmitters all at 1 KW MINIMUM RF output on HF is "NOT Big Time?" How do you feel over 200,000 messages per month sent is "NOT Big Time?" How do you feel that a Signal Battalion directly attached to an area headquarters is "NOT Big Time?" Kiss my yes.

Wow, you think being IN the Department of State comms "IS"
a bigger time? Of course you do. ANYTHING you do is (in your words here) bigger and better than what anyone else in here has done, ever...

>You are the only one of them
>comparing learning the Morse Code to an "AUTISTIC TALENT".

Sorry, sweetums, but I'm the SECOND one intimating that the "talent" is so. Have you forgetten the words of "John Smith" (another Angeleno) so quickly? Of course you will.
You ALWAYS try to "blame" someone else as "being in error"
whenever they disagree with you.

Being the archtypical Prussian pedantic literalist who only "obeys orders" of directives from the ARRL does NOT make YOU "true," sweetie.

You are one HUMORLESS buzzard whose skin is SO thin that it rivals the shaving thickness from a microtome output.

>Leonard, I have little doubt that once all of the smoke clears away,

So, other than you and Jimmie Noserve, who gives a shit?

I got my PROFESSIONAL radio operator license in 1956 and used it. I got my (no test whatsoever) CB license in 1959 and used it. I got my COMMERCIAL PLMRS station license in the 80s (as co-owner but responsible for technical operation) and used it.

Are you going to say that an AMATEUR radio license is "more Big Time" than what I've gotten already? That I MUST have a ham license from the FCC to prove my strength, force, agility, and intelligence MORE than a whole career
IN the radio-electronics industry?!?

Of course you do! Anyone who has done less than you is always the lesser in your comments.

What, the old pre-WW2 "A-N" beacons on LF? Good grief, Snoopy, those aren't being used by Real pilots these days.

If you mean VOR or ILS with the periodic morse code tone identifier, those ARE being used in civil aviation. But, the VOR isn't called a "beacon" and the ILS certainly isn't one of those. The 75 MHz marker beacons are "beacons" but they do NOT have any morse identifier, just a constant AM tone denoting Outer, Middle, or Inner beacon.

Your AMATEUR license does NOT authorize you to transmit in the Aviation Radio Services.

>I hear utility stations in the HF bands using Morse Code >for two way communication.

Then feel free to listen to those "utility stations" and enjoy what they have to say, if anything comprehensible to you. Your AMATEUR license doesn't authorize you to transmit outside the HF amateur bands.

>That aside, I have little interest in the >modes other radio services use.

Of course you don't...you are a smug, arrogant Extra class AMATEUR.

You don't seem to give a shit about "the pool of trained operators" (in amateur radio) for national needs, only your own. Since morse code is all but DEAD in all other US radio services, that "pool of trained" morsemen is so much ARRL propaganda. The rest of the radio world just does NOT need morsemen. Try...TRY to get used to it.

>>What's it to you, Len?

NOTHING "in it" for me, pedantic Prussian literalist. It's just a thing to MODERNIZE a HOBBY radio activity. Most of the other radio services in the USA have been modernized, but amateur radio has been (mostly) stuck in the standards and practices of the 1930s.

>You aren't a radio amateur and you aren't likely to be one.

Hey, pedantic Prussian literalist, go auto-fornicate.

I MIGHT get an amateur radio license later and I MIGHT NOT.
It's NOT up to YOU to decide whether I can or can't.
Don't let your smug, arrogant Prussian attitude go to far like you did with sentence.

The US amateur radio regulation morse code test was about GETTING INTO amateur radio via authorized licensing.

Since you've been licensed as an AMATEUR since your teen
years, have you spent all your AMATEUR radio time GETTING INTO amateur radio? I don't think so.

No matter, pedantic Prussian literalist, the FCC HAS DECIDED to END US amateur radio licensing morse code TESTING. Gone, finito, adieu, bye-bye to it as soon as the R&O is published in the Federal Register giving the legal END to that testing.

>... I made a number of 160m >contacts last night with Nordic and Russian radio amateurs. We used CW.
>I do hope that's okay with you. Perhaps we should have thought to >check.

You can do anything LEGAL that you want. It's not up to me to DICTATE what others do or don't do, what opinions one "should have" or "should not have." You might reflect on the latter since you are ALWAYS "telling me" what attitudes
I "should have." * F * Y * D * I * T * M * !

BTW, did any of those Nordic and Russian amateurs have French amateur radio licenses too? Did you check THEIR authorized operating privileges?

>No one involved had tossed the Morse Code into any dumpster.

The FCC IS going to toss morse code TESTING in the big federal dumpster. They already announced it. All it takes is to add the final effective date and publish that in the Federal Register. [ain't that sumthin' tho?]

No Primary Duty of soldiering? Tsk, tsk, the Scouts were originally formed to BE devoted to uniforms, organization, survival in the wilderness just like the troops of the Boer War. Scouting has since changed to be more of a social organization with lots of fundamental skills that CAN be gained (but are not absolutely required).

>Come to think of it, I never received any instructions from the Air >Force about my duty to close with and destroy any enemies.

Tsk, try to be honest about "your time" in the USAF. Enlisted specialists were NOT taught-trained-exercised as land soldiers. During the 1960s. I've seen too many of them of the 50s and 60s to believe they could ever soldier in the field.

I put you down as just another braggart REMF who wants to IMPLY he was "in combat" but never was. Just like Robesin and his "seven hostile actions." I.e., bullshit.

>In your time >in the Army, did you ever close with and/or destroy any enemy, Len?

No, I was never "closing with or destroying any enemy" from March 1952 through February 1956. What's it to you, Heil?

I voluntarily enlisted in the US Army in March 1952 and didn't get assigned to the Far East until January 1953. "Permanent truce" in Korea was established in July 1953. Did you expect me to violate the UCMJ and go AWOL to Korea in order to "fight?"

I stayed where assigned by orders, did my duty. That's all explained in my photo essay mentioned earlier. I have NO problem with explaining what I did and what I worked on and when in Japan during my Army enlistement. But, YOU have a great deal of "trouble" is going into ANY detail about exactly what you did and where. Typical REMF "military career explanation" just like the Robesin.

Yes, I was assigned to a REAR AREA. You could label me as a "RE-F" since my sexual partners hadn't - to the best of my knowledge - been mothers yet. But, that REAR AREA duty that was mine involved HIGH FREQUENCY RADIO COMMUNICATIONS...and VHF, UHF, and microwave radio communications. Concentration was on transmitters but also involved receivers.

I won't bother asking the pedantic Prussian literalist what HE did "during the war" as another REMF. He hasn't said and I don't think he will ever say what it was. Typical of the smug, arrogant "I am always better than you extra class."

>... I never received any Morse Code training in the Air >Force either, though I passed a Morse Code receiving test as a part of >my Bypassed Specialist exams.

That's what you SAY but somehow it rings false and always has.
USAF enlisted 'specialists" of the 50s and 60s were NOT some kind of radio-electronics whizzes in the REAR AREAS. Most of the enlisted ranks were simply trying to get OUT of being soldiers on land where the enemy was trying to kill them.

Tell us all about the strong, mighty, virile warriors of the USAF enlisted ranks of the 50s and 60s and how they conquered the (radio) airwaves then? By the time of the ending of the draft in 1973, the USAF had to smarten-up and start to make the enlisted ranks be a lot better than the draft-dodging dummies doing their time before then.
As a civilian engineer in the 60s through now, I've seen the USAF improve their technical smarts a great deal.
But, before the end of the draft, the USAF enlisted smarts were akin to the AMATEUR hobbyist level of experience in their 'specialties." That's just how it was, Vietnam REMF.

>> I never had to learn any morsemanship in 1952, 1962, 1972,

Riiiight. Between 1952 and time now I NEVER had to learn or use morse code as a PROFESSIONAL OR as a hobbyist. That's a 54-year span of time. That's operating a transmitter LEGALLY in the EM spectrum from VLF to about 25 GHz, all the decade-wide sections of the spectrum.

>Let's call it one more thing that I know and that you don't.

Let's call it the ONLY thing in radio-electronics that You "know more than I"...as a MORSEMAN on the AMATEUR bands, using a morse code that has been relatively unchanged since 1844 (162 years ago).

>That "Extra right out of the box" has certainly given you more trouble, >hasn't it?

No "trouble" at all. I haven't pursued it in the last six years. I lost interest in getting a legal amateur radio license four decades ago. Who needed morse code in the 1960s? Only the Recreationists trying to copy the "radio pioneering of the 1920s and 1930s using an already out-of-date mode. Hardly any sort of "advancing the state of the communications art" was it?

>Many of us have more experience than you in commercial, military or >governmental HF radio operations. Live with it.

News Flash, pedantic Prussian: That "us" does NOT include YOU.

Besides, to toss the literalist stuff right back in your face,
"commercial, military or governmental HF radio operations" is NOT AMATEUR RADIO! :-)

Live with THAT! :-)

How in the HELL do YOU know? You really need to download my

Tell us all about the SEMICONDUCTOR-based equipment that ham radio was using in the 1950s and how "I could have learned from (getting a ham license)" back then? You speak BULLSHIT.

Google archives are LOADED WITH EXAMPLES of "how badly YOU react" to those that don't meet your versions of What Should Be in US amateur radio. Pedantic Prussianism, literally quoted from the publications of the ARRL.

My correspondence with the FCC is a matter of public record and are strongly worded AGAINST morse code testing. In those public records (which include the "electronic" archives... actually magnetic archives) you will find that I do NOT think the FCC's rulings should be to appease the emotional hunger of the rabid amateur morsemen determined to keep code testing forever and ever.

>Nobody can tell Big Leonard what to do.

YES they can...and DO. You've been trying to do it for years!

>When the Morse Code exam is >removed, you'll still be trying to open the box holding that Extra ticket.

What "box?" What "ticket?"

I've acquired three other FCC licenses in my time and still pursue a hobby of electronics and radio in retirement. I am secure in what I am and what I know. I've made a good living in radio-electronics over the last half century and don't need more "licenses." I sure as hell don't need to take up an on-off code "skill" that's been around for 162 years...and then DROPPED by ALL other radio services (if they ever considered morse code to begin with)!

My object in here was to advocate the ELIMINATION of the code exam. Except for the legal posting in the Federal Register, THAT ELIMINATION HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED! Learn to live with it.

>How many? Is this quote another of your factual errors?

Note the spelling of the word DEARTH. That's called a play on words. A bit of HUMOR, a subject that has eluded your correspondence in here.

Humorless pedantic Prussian literalists have GREAT difficulty with any sort of humor or even whimsy. Try to accept that. The no-code-test advocates aren't all hidebound to keep code testing forever and ever, always marching in ranks to the morse drumbeat under the direction of the ARRL old folks.

But, the humorless pedantic Prussian literalist will be always on the lookout for "errors" and chastize those who don't think as He does...then berate them for not being as good as He is.

FCC 06-178 is almost LAW. That's a fact of amateur radio life for those seeking a hobby radio activity. Too bad for the adamant pro-coders busy sneering and insulting all the no-coders. But, times change, new laws will come in to change the lives of some. The pro-coders have had their emotional sustenance long enough. Now its time for THEM to Get Off Federal Welfare and be good hobbyists of modern times.

David, to you as always * F * Y * D * I * T * M * !

However, hams who get their ONLY 'radio news' from ARRL wouldn't know about such things. <shrug>

Absolutely. In US ham radio all must be white male HETEROsexuals who love honor and obey morse code.

Google never forgets. Last night I did a quick copy of the
All-Time Posters on RRAP and here is what they had for 28
Dec 06:

K4YZ 11,945 [warrior of Seven Hostile Actions]
Cecil Moore 11,892
James Miccolis 8,836
Dick Carroll 7,091 [SK]
-me- 6,191
Eric June 5,434
David Heil 5,358
Ed Hare 5,253
Mark Morgan 4,633
James Rosenthal 4,286

Grand total of just the Top Ten: 73,919 posts!

Cecil has been in the newsgroup perhaps the longest, finally got tired of it and went over to rec.radio.amateur.antenna. June, Hare, and Rosenthal haven't been here for at least two years.
Major Dud finally grabbed more archive space than Cecil (which was expected) even though he mainly talks about HIMSELF and his mighty "military" service while personally insulting everyone who dares disagree with him. :-)

I wouldn't say it makes you a better ham for having passed the code test.

I would say it makes you a better ham because you are now familiar with another operating mode commonly in use in the amateur radio service.

Likewise, I would make the same statement -- it makes you a better ham -- regardless of the mode of operation -- CW, SSB, FM, AM -- you name it.

Why? As an amateur, experience with ANY mode of operation, IMO, makes you a "better" ham.

Sometimes I feel as though I should apologize for all hams, then I think Neither was there a "hot-ham-and-cheese" posting here in 1996. There is no amateur radio license issued to "hot-ham-and-cheese".

Actually, I was on both rrap and rraa. My attitude has always been of a Libertarian

free market of modes.

It's a bit of a non-sequitar, but since you asked, I only work with one Ham who is big on Morse code. He is pretty technically savvy. But that is a sample of one, so I can't make any judgement. Quite a few of the Hams that I am friends with are quite competent, and Morse code acumen doesn't seem to be much of a determinant of technical savvy.

But I'm around a lot of IT types, and can make a judgement. By and large, they are not technically proficient. That's just how it is. Of course there are a few who know beyond programming and simply buying and using - but they are the exceptions that prove the rule.

That's a grand total of no less than 10,993 postings to rrap, under no less than seven different screen names, all by you. There may be more - 10,993 is a minimum number.

Google never forgets.

If your ability to count your own postings results in a number that is so inaccurate, why should anyone trust your counts of other things?

If your ability to represent your own history of posting to rrap is so error-filled, why should anyone trust your recounting of other history?

Please accept my apologies for omitting a part of the link...here is correct one:

http://sujan.hallikainen.org/BroadcastHistory/uploads/My3Years.pdf

If you try just to the 'BroadcastHistory' part you will see a page lots and lots of information on what was originally a site for "Saving History from the Dumpster." My upload is under the "Military

BTW, Hallikainen himself is a ham. :-)

Maybe he was a UK ham troll then?

Was I on that early? :-) I was on BBSs and doing letter-writing a lot earlier than that, over a decade before.

>Odd, but Len has been on HF through SHF. All without code.

From VLF on up through 25 GHz...transmitting LEGALLY. :-)

I've never described myself or even implied that I was a "brilliant electronics engineer." I've had lots of industry experience in radio-electronics since 1952 (military), then beginning 1956 (aerospace) in southern California. ONE radio-relevant US patent, 3848191, issued 1974.

I had managed about 8 WPM in receiving morse code in the 60s, then thought about the uselessness of such effort seeing as I had worked in Big Time HF communications a decade earlier, all WITHOUT having to learn or to use any morse code. The minimal was then 13 WPM for a ham license. I'd already had 3 years of military experience, leading to operating team supervisor, on long-haul HF circuits across the Pacific and south to the Phillippines, using RTTY and SSB (multi-channel commercial kind) with some old-standard FAX plus being supervisor grade on multi-channel microwave radio relay equipment. So WHY was this old, old morse code so damn important to amateurs?

Came to the conclusion they all wanted to just recreate a pioneering past where very few had participated, didn't really go in for the comradeship that was supposed to be in ham radio.

Besides, CB had been created in 1958 and that was good for local communications. The Los Angeles area didn't lack for 'other communicators' in the early 1960s. :-)

Where the fork do these TROLLS come from, Brian? :-(

This twit obviously wants to FIGHT with words. Poor guy is already gunned down and carted off to Boot Hill but he not know it...

On the other hand, I've memorized a few formulas a tad more complicated than Ohms's Law of Resistance...so that probably is "rocket science" to some amateurs.

Hmmm...the average ham mass is about 77 Kg. :-)

Maybe the desk-bound contester is 10 Kilo more from sitting in front of his raddio for so long? :-)

Just WHAT am I supposed to "make available" to those ham "masses?" Does Steppin Wolfe expect miracles from the brass-pounders who've tried to pound ME for years about their love for morse code?

What happened to all the "smarts" among the brass-pounders?
Why couldn't THEY do the "innovation" for their "unwashed" brethren? None of the brass-pounders seem to answer that.

>>> who only know how to pound keys?
>>Welp, there are a bunch who know how to pound their chests. That's >>what the ARRL VP was saying when K4YZ attacked me.

Some of those Mighty Macho Morsemen pound what they think are the chest mass of King Kong...but are still little code monkeys dancing to the manual morse organ of that publishing house in Connecticutt. I doubt many of them could climb even a few stairwells of the Empire State building in NYC...with or without biplanes buzzing around trying to shoot them.

>> Will you now be >> getting your extra class and dazzling us with new ideas and inventions that >> will forever modernize the amateur modes, you know, the sort of achievements >> you always said would be possible if only they got rid of that nasty Morse >> test?

Tsk, the Troll from the UK has strapped on his holsters and wants to walk down the street for a shoot-out... :-)

Thinking back to what I've written in here, I've NOT said much about "achievements possible if the code test was removed." That wasn't my point. The code test for an AMATEUR radio license was just an anachronism, a left-over, something that mattered ONLY to the very old timers who had to take it (and therefore everyone else has to take it too).

Amateur radio IS a fine, absorbing HOBBY pursuit. It should be open to ALL who can qualify for the license through the written tests. It is NOT nor should it ever have been some kind of Living Museum of Archaic Radio Technology. But, in the minds of the pro-coders, that's all it was...a Living Museum of Morsemanship.

Morse code was NEVER an intellectual achievemnt, NEVER a 'technology.' It was, is, and will remain, just a psychomotor skill acquired through hours of practice. It requires an APTITUDE for the on-off patterns similar to drumbeat rhythms. Some take a VERY long time to master it at slow speeds while others can learn quickly to achieve high rates.

The OLD S25 of the ITU Radio Regulations had a political flavor to it...that of mandating adminstrations to test for morse code for licenses having "below 30 MHz privileges."
Now "30 MHz" is an arbitrary choice. It is the top of the definition of the HF decade in the spectrum. The next-higher amateur radio band begins at 50 MHz and distance propagation isn't very good up there. The limit on 30 MHz APPEASED the old-timers in ham radio who regarded the ham HF bands as "theirs" and wanted to keep morse code in the very worst way. The International Amateur Radio Union saw the present-day realism and did not want to appease the old-timers or give in to their morse mythos. S25 got an almost total rewrite in 2003 to bring it up to relatively modern times. [S25 hasn't quite reached this new millennium

yet but give it time...]

Now, as to ORIGINAL INNOVATIONS, I can think of only TWO and both of those done by Brits: Peter Martinez for PSK31 and Mike Gingell for his R-C Polyphase Network used in SSB modulation-demodulation other than by more-expensive crystal filters. Those were new, original. Mike Gingell did his Polyphase network for a PhD in the UK before moving to USA.
Martinez used Gingell's network in a ham transceiver application three decades ago and has continued to innovate things in HF radio. All the rest are ADAPTATIONS of EXISTING commercial applications in circuits and systems...some very good but still ADAPTATIONS, not ground-breaking new things.

>How about if he does as much innovating as has N2EY, W3RV, K0HB, K8MN, >and K4YZ.

W3RV, K8MN, and K4YZ will be LOST behind the front panel of any radio having semiconductors. N2EY now builds KITS using semiconductors...his last described tube rig was a kluge of tube circuits made from the equivalent of dumpster diving (minimal cost some kind of achievement). Hans probably can go behind the front panel and understand things since he remains working in true high-tech electronics (the only questions there is his being a 'manager,' a postion not always held has having real-savvy technical smarts by those working in the electronics industry). :-)

>Hmmm? Did I leave Cecil off the list on purpose?

Cecil got tired of the self-righteous, self-important few morsemen on RRAP and inhabited RRAA. Cecil likes to try out antenna designs...and does some good things there from what I've read elsewhere. Cecil has more patents awarded than I...perhaps five (?) in all.

>> We will all be waiting Len.
>We? You are trolls?

They are...Steppin Wolfe and all the other anony-mousies eager to do Word War III in here. :-)

FCC 06-178 will become LAW of the USA soon. Whatever follows (insofar as amateur radio is concerned) will happen. The "predictions" in here are just Guesses, suppositions based on individual's mode biases. What will be will be...

Best regards,
LenAnderson@ieee.org

Yeah, like, "One cannot be a driver without ever having changed a tire in Roger that, Cecil. :-) Way to go...FREEDOM of choice and not coerced, brainwashed, or anything else by some old men in Newington. :-)

Nice Hog you got...! :-)

Really, Mark? Well, let's cook up some simple calculus problems for you to work before all our friends here.

1) I'm embarrassed to even ask this one: Tell us the derivative of f(x) = ln(e^x).

2) Find g' if g(x) = sin x / tan x.

3) and 4) While you're at it, find the integrals of f and g above, too.

A BS in physics? Cool. Let me think of some physics problems you can solve for us.

Jim, would you mind tallying up all of your postings under all of your

That is sooo sad. The subjects in England may have holsters, but

Some got to learn it in the military, including three hots and a cot,

I recall Cecil succumbing to their jeers to join them on CW. Poor bastard so wanted to prove himself to them that he operated CW with a thunderstorm overhead and lightning alqds. After such heroics, they still don't like his ideas and ostracize him.

Whatever would be the point of that?

Here are just some of yours, Brian Burke:

1577 as hot-ham-and-cheese@hotmail.com
2863 as burke1@icss.net
2973 as billybeeper@juno.com
2211 as brianburke@my-dejanews.com

These are just your posts to rrap, and just the ones using those four screen names. There are probably many more under other names.

Total comes to 9,624.

There are probably other screen names

Alun,

I don't think Len wants a ham license - with or without a code test. If he did, he'd have gotten one years or even decades ago.

Way back on January 19, 2000, Len said he was "going for Extra right out of the box". But he hasn't done so yet - nor obtained any sort of amateur radio license.

What "doing wrong" do you mean, Len?

Brian Burke says I came up with a proposal for a "No-Test" amateur radio service. Yet nobody seems to be able to show us that alleged proposal.

Sounds like you have delusions of grandeur, Len.

For all your hundreds of pages of commentary to FCC, they did not cite any of your arguments or facts in the recent Report and Order. All you got was your name in the comment list, same as me and several others.

Well, let's see:

IIRC:

Before the 2000 restructuring:

Technician required 2 written tests totalling 65 questions

General required 3 written tests totalling 100 questions

Extra required 5 written tests totalling 190 questions

After the 2000 restructuring:

Technician requires 1 written test totalling 35 questions. That's a 50% reduction in the number of tests and a 46% reduction in the number of questions.

General requires 2 written tests totalling 70 questions. That's a 33% reduction in the number of tests and a 30% reduction in the number of questions.

Extra requires 3 written tests totalling 120 questions. That's a 40% reduction in the number of tests and a 37% reduction in the number of questions.

No, that's not true at all. You assumed what was neither stated nor implied.

> and running status of opinions as I did (posting them in > this newsgroup).

The significant facts are:

1) Nobody checked your work.
2) The details of your count are kept secret. For example, if the same person submitted several different comments, did you count each comment, or just the submitter?
3) The AH0A tabulation showed a detailed breakdown by comment submitter, and told how duplicates were counted. You did not.
And now the big one:

Both your count and the AH0A count showed majority support for the retention of at least some code testing. But you want the majority to be pushed aside and the minority to rule.

All the treaty change did was allow each country to decide for itself.

How many countries have eliminated Morse Code testing for all amateur radio licenses?

How many countries have retained at least some Morse Code testing for at least some amateur radio licenses?

Sooner or later it will become effective.

Then what will you have to carry on about, Len?

I tend to agree with that prediction since Novice already had code credit and the only thing between the Novice and Tech has been the written test itself. If a Novice hasn't upgraded in the last 5 or 10 years, odds are they have dropped from the ham radio ranks already.

I suspect it is just "low priority" within the FCC's scope of authority.

Cheers and Happy New Year to all,

My wish for the New Year is that this forum once again become a place for rational thought and discussion. The personal attacks and other slimeball commentary by those who know who they are should end. It is tragic that some people can't abide by simply repecting the medium and using it in a positive manner.

Yup, I believe that was also a significant factor. It wouldn't surprise me they wanted to clean up some loose ends before the end of the year.

Like any bureaucracy, the last thing they will do is move to save their lives. This is what they did here, in a last move and hoping that it is not too late, they removed the CW test hoping to save the amateur bands ... they know how to save their jobs!

I disagree somewhat. There will always be a segment which is 'inactive', but will keep their license active so they can pick it up again someday when they want.

After the restructuring of 2000, I wondered why we didn't see a mass-exodus from the General and the Advanced ranks to Extra. There has been a continual decrease in the General/Advanced licenses and increase in the Extra class, but not as much as I would have expected. Without that nasty, 'hard' 20wpm code test, wouldn't you expect those licensees to flock to Extra?

Perhaps a segment of those licensees are either inactive, or simply happy with the operating privileges they have and have no need to upgrade? If so, wouldn't those same reasons apply to some Novices not upgrading?

I doubt the number of amateurs would cause them to worry about their jobs.
They have a lot of areas besides amateur radio under them. And they are not elected officials so they don't have to worry there either.

Yes the same reasons would apply and I do believe that the number of Novice licensees won't drop to zero. However looking at the slope of the curve from the time the no-code Tech was implemented to now continues to show a steep and steady drop. The rate of decline has been nearly constant with no sign yet of leveling out for that license class. I would expect to see a few hundred Novices continuing to renew as Novices but they will be statistically insignificant.

Looking at the lack of activity in the Novice segments of the HF bands, the novice segments in the 220 band, and the fact that we now have no Novice licensees left in our local club, it would appear to me that the trend has been for the active Novices to upgrade and the inactive ones not to renew on the whole. There will be exceptions of course.

Hello, Alun. Okay, I'll write a letter to the FDA and post it Wednesday...

I wasn't aware one needed a ham license to purchase and eat ham.

My wife and I had ham during the holidays. He tasted like chicken...

John, I think your thinking is becoming too focussed about the FCC.

Amateur radio is one of the LESSER radio services the FCC must, by law of Congress, regulate. That same law does NOT empower them to "boost" (support, encourage) amateur radio in any way, despite what so many ardent, life-style radio amateurs think.

Think back on FCC 99-412, the R&O establishing "restructuring."
It was issued on 30 December 1999, just about the last document released in 1999 by the FCC. Since their official end of commentary on the NPRM for restructuring was 15 January 1999, that left them nearly a year to decide on the final R&O.

FCC 06-178 only has to be fitted into the publication schedule of the Federal Register to become effective...it's all set to go except for the effective date. It's taken roughly a year for the FCC to decide on that (give or take a few months).

Given much MORE important subjects before the FCC, such as the recent decision to allow AT&T to buy BellSouth, amateur radio pales in significance. All one needs to do is check the home page of the FCC to see their workload on US civil radio regulations...it isn't small and those regulations on non-amateur communications subjects affect millions of Americans more than a hobby radio activity. Amateur radio is lucky to get as quick decisions as with other radio services at the FCC.

One thing for sure, it didn't seem that NCI was badgering the FCC to decide...it took NCI about a week to post the news of the pending FCC 06-178 R&O! No sweat with the ARRL...the League has two groups in DC to pester the FCC, a Lobbying service and a legal firm...they can get "advance" notice of things quicker than a non-dues civilian group...makes them look as if they are "in the know."

One must be patient. <eyebrows akimbo>

I think this is the key to Ms Kotts reaction.
New folks "the unwashed masses" are going to move into what she thinks of as her exclusive neighborhood, and things will be different.
Change is upsetting, but change happens.
Deal with it.
Radio and Cw were "new fangled technology" in 1905, because she grew up with this technology, She wants to stick to the 19th century technology she is familiar with.
If the CDC did that, people would be dying like flies from what are NOW preventable diseases like Measles, Cholera, typhoid , typhus, Yellow Fever, etc.And surgery would be done without anaesthesia.

NO this is not true! Once knowledge is discovered it willl not DIE. Its usage may decline as other technologies supplant it, BUT it will survive.

A surge in interest is a GOOD thing. Too many Old Farts like me (age 55), and not enough youngsters coming in to the hobby.

IS this an Official policy if the CDC? Is she its authorized spokesperson????
Last time I was there, the CDC headquarters were outside Atlanta, Georgia.

I think you have little respect for "The Straw Which Broke the Camels Back" or just plain attrition ... at least in this definition of attrition: " Attrition refers to a method of achieving a reduction in personnel by not refilling positions that are vacated through resignation, reassignment, transfer, retirement, or means other than layoffs."

CW is my favorite mode and I enjoy 10 wpm QSO's.
GMC is my favorite pickup. Vanilla Bean is my favorite ice cream. Texas is my favorite state.
I just don't believe in forcing my favorite mode on anyone else any more than I believe in forcing my favorite pickup, my favorite ice cream, and my favorite state on anyone else. What is wrong

Seeing as you passed the CW element--I see no problem in you:
1) Driving a GMC.
2) Eating Vanilla Bean Ice Cream.
3) Living in Texas.

However, you did right with checking with us first ... I can only hope

Was there a prize for being the only one to post a twenty page photo essay? You've posted the link a number of times.

To some, it is really "big time", Len. How many messages did you send each month? Did you folks just send? Were any messages received?

Quit giving orders, Len. You aren't in charge of anything, old sojer.

No, I haven't, Len. John didn't write "AUTISTIC TALENT". You did.

> Of course you will.

I've never made such a claim, Len.

You make plenty of errors, Len, whether I disagree with you or not.

I'm not Prussian and I take no orders from the ARRL. Are you sweet on

That isn't an amateur radio license, though you seem to have found your niche.

That isn't an amateur radio license, Len.

What's with your "big time" fetish, Len? None of those things you mention qualify you to operate an amateur radio license.

This isn't a radio-electronics industry newsgroup, Len. This one is about amateur radio, something in which you do not participate, despite your boast of some years back.

> Of course you do! Anyone who has done less than you is

Of course I do what, Len? You didn't even write a complete sentence.
You provided a lengthy clause beginning with "That I MUST have..."

I'm not familiar with that, Len. What does it mean?

Well, poor Leonard, if you want something to be sarcastic, it should fit the mold. It looks like a juvenile attempt at humor. My response to it was sarcastic.

Some transmit in the clear. Some transmit in the clear but in foreign languages. Some transmit letter or number groups. I'll listen when I feel like it. Thanks for giving me the OK.

> Your AMATEUR license doesn't authorize you to transmit
> outside the HF amateur bands.

I'll be darned. First you write about other services not using Morse Code. When I tell you about other services using Morse Code, you feel the need to tell me that I can't transmit outside the amateur bands using my amateur radio license. I did once, Len. The FCC authorized me to transmit SSB on 14.351 in 1983. I and the others involved were authorized to use our amateur callsigns. I have it all properly logged.

Wow, such language, Len. Are you losing control of yourself? I care very much about my country having a trained pool of radio operators. By being proficient in the use of Morse Code, I have one tool, one additional mode that not all operators have. I've provided my services to my country from that pool of trained operators at least three times--two of them quite lengthy times--in the military and for the U.S. Department of State.

> Since morse code is all but DEAD in all other
> US radio services, that "pool of trained" morsemen is so

"All but DEAD" isn't the same as "dead". Morse Code is not the only mode for the pool of trained radio operators. Your anti-ARRL bias is showing again.

> The rest of the radio world just
> does NOT need morsemen. Try...TRY to get used to it.

Some of the radio world just might. Perhaps they haven't consulted with you on the topic.

>>> What's it to you, Len?

I didn't ask what was in it for you. I asked what it is to you. I'm not Prussian. I note that you often characterize those who know something in more detail than yourself as being pedantic.

Did you modernize the other services too? There is little indication that amateur radio is "mostly" or otherwise, stuck in the 1930's. You are incorrect. You've made another factual error.

testing what kept you from acting on your decades-long interest?

> Since you've been licensed as an AMATEUR since your teen
> years, have you spent all your AMATEUR radio time GETTING > INTO amateur radio? I don't think so.

No, Len. I wasted very little time getting into amateur radio.
I was exposed to it in 1962 and obtained a license about a year-and-a-half later. I didn't dilly-dally for decades. I didn't make any idle boasts about getting the top license right out of any box.

That still won't grant you that "Extra right out of the box". You'll actually have to appear before volunteer examiners and pass some exams.

Formed to be devoted to uniforms, Len? I was never taught any such I've never had any "trouble" at all, Len. I've chosen not to reveal certain aspects of my service in Vietnam to you. You've actually claimed on a number of occasions that I was assigned to MARS, despite your being repeatedly told that I was never assigned to a MARS unit anywhere during my time in the military.

> Typical REMF "military

There is no one named Robesin. There is a Steve Robeson. His USMC service is documented on a free web site. Did you ever find it?

Don't tell us more than we need to know, Len.

Yep, you were assigned to a rear area in a place where there wasn't any combat. You're the guy who told us what it was like to go through an artillery barrage in your classic sphincter post.

> But, that REAR AREA duty that

That's interesting, Leonard. My job in Vietnam involved both transmitters and receivers. We didn't concentrate on one over the other.

I'm not Prussian and, as we know, anyone who knows more detail about something than you is likely labeled as pedantic.

Well, if that was the game, it certainly didn't work for many. You'd think those saps would have wised up. A lot of those guys were at itty-bitty uncontrolled air strips where they had hooches right next to Army units.

> Tell us all about the strong, mighty, virile warriors of

See, you didn't need input from me. You're already describing your fellow veterans as "draft-dodging dummies doing their time before then." You're living up to the well-known profile all by yourself.

Weren't you a volunteer, Len? Did you join to avoid the draft? Did you know that no one was drafted into the Air Force?

There are likely numerous things I know about radio operations that you've not done and that you may know nothing about. After all, my HF radio experience spans 43 years and includes military and government civilian service. I've never operated only with Morse Code. My military service involved no Morse Code and I used it only in a couple of spots during my government civilian service.

I don't recall anyone saying that it was. It was and is something which

In the 1950's? There wasn't much. There wasn't a great deal in the way of semiconductor HF receiving/transmitting equipment in the commercial world back then either. The 1960's brought a number of unique items including:

Davco DR-30
http://www.miami.muohio.edu/garland_archive/personal/w8zr/vintage/receivers/davco.htm

Hammarlund HQ-215
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/commrxvr/hq215.html

and hybrids like the Drake 2-C http://www.dxing.com/rx/2c.htm

You could have learned by becoming proficient in operating techniques in several modes, through learning HF propagation, not only on a reliable path basis but on a possible path basis. You could have learned other than point-to-point HF radio techniques.

You aren't a no-coder, Len. You aren't a radio amateur at all.

So, if I understand you correctly: those who did something for in order to obtain a license were on welfare. Those who do less and get a "gimme" are, in effect, doing more. Is that about it?

"Same as" several THOUSAND "others."

NO problem to me. I got my words in, that's enough.

It WORKED, didn't it? :-)

None. You already act older than me. :-)

But, I "first fired up (a full gallon)" while in the military service of my country. You've NEVER served in the US military nor is there any indication you were EVER in the government of the USA as a civilian.

>Yet FCC never quoted anything you wrote, Len.

NO problem to me. ALL my Comments to the FCC are in the public record. <shrug>

Tsk, tsk, you are STILL bringing up my 14-page Comment on NPRM 99-143 that was accepted over 7 years ago...in here, trying (vainly) to make some kind of negative point about
me. :-)

You want to RE-argue the past? Fine. In future responses to such demands to re-argue past subjects, I'll just flip you the bird and write: *F*Y*D*I*T*M* ! :-)

Poor guy, you never did find anything on the ByteBrothers, did you? :-)

You couldn't. You've never served your country in the military or in the government.

Here's a hint: You could still join the Civil Air Patrol and "defend our skies!" Why, you might even get to be an OFFICER! :-) That supposedly worked for another extra.

>I don't see you acknowedging your anticode "brethren" here either.

I don't have any "anticode" brethren. I HAVE acknowledged others who are No-Code-Test Advocates, abbreviated 'NCTA."

I was NEVER advocating the elimination of morse code USE.
If you want to USE a slow, archaic mode of communications
then feel free. Nobody is stopping you.

>I'm not responsible for what others post here. Only what I post here.

Oh my, a DISCLAIMER. :-)

>You don't seem to want to be responsible for what you post here, Len.

There's NO "condition" on public posting, NO "need" to take some kind of "oath of responsibility." :-) One posts and that's that.

Your wanting to go BACK and RE-argue OLD subjects, AS IF trying to "win" a point you lost back then is NOT in the area of "responsibility." It's just your sore-head LOSER kind of attitude...or a thinly-disguised attempt on your part to make some negative comment about a correspondent who is against your godly views of amateur radio policy.

What's past is past. Live with it.

Repeating the "directives" from the ARRL and using the old,

Oh, my...sipping from the Whine of Sour Grapes are you?

Tsk, the FCC didn't decide the way YOU wanted them to so now they've made a "bad" decision! :-)

Sounds like YOU are having the "delusions of grandeur" while play-acting the Ultimate Judge on What Will Be!

The FCC made a decision, announced it, even made the R&O public (FCC 06-178). That's going to be IT when it goes into the Federal Register.

I think you're just a SORE LOSER. I was away from the house and computer contact for most of 15 Dec 06. I don't pretend to be a "journalist" or "reporter." And, if I use data from someplace else, I attribute to the source, not some cribbing from another pro-coder's website without mention of the source.

Hams use VOICE and DATA (many kinds) in the majority, yet there has NEVER been any manual-operation TEST for those modes.

The TESTS should be what the FCC considers. The FCC is the regulating agency for USA civil radio, not Miccolis.
The FCC grants licenses, not Miccolis, not the ARRL, not some morseman.

Now quit being such a SORE LOSER. All your long, windy negative comments against others are NOT going to change a thing. Go argue with the FCC. Sue them if you feel you've been so "wronged" and "emotionally upset."

Only in the eyes of some rabid morseman eager to negate any comments by an NCTA. :-)

Radio Regulations S25, not the "treaty." The actualy TREATY with the ITU was agreed to by the USA many years ago. Gee, for such a stickler for "accuracy" you sure made a blooper there! :-) have absolutely NOTHING to do with amateur radio or even radio in the generic sense! :-)

It won't be in HERE, sweetums. The constant WHINING from the SORE LOSER morsemen may be affecting my hearing. Can't have all that morsemen WHINING pose a personal health risk. :-)

Len, you used to argue that ham radio would benefit if only the FCC would let the brilliant RF scientists, engineers and physicists, who only lacked the ability or desire to learn Morse code, to enter the service. You also used to argue that the code was a roadblock to younger people entering the hobby. On the surface, these seemed to be some pretty noble ideals upon which to take the high road. This is all on the record.

But now it becomes clear that, with the Morse requirement indeed no longer a low tech obstacle to these high potential contributors, the promises of these positive outcomes have been pretty much toned down...by about 100%. Maybe they will happen but probably (I'm sure you agree) things will pretty much stay the same, other than the rise of another marginal increase in the lid factor similar towhat we saw on 75m with the advent of the 5wpm generals.

Now you say it was all only for freedom of choice.

When did your flip turn into a flop? :-))

Google provided it. I just copied the numbers that Google

Miccolis says the Top Ten listing is "wrong." That's a NEW

SLOW-speed modem, Brian. Like my fancy-schmansy 300/1200 baud

Firmly-entrenched Morsemen CAN'T STAND free-thinkers like Cecil Moore. Morsemen "MUST" obey the standards and BTW, we've got "The Sound of Music" recorded on our digital cable TV box from HBO. It's the UNCUT version in widescreen and the clarity, detail, and music is wonderful, soooo much better than the old analog TV. The Time-Warner cable service box has a Tivo-like recorder with about 20 hour capacity... no loss at all in HDTV clarity. The uncut version is over two hours long. Something to think about for the family for home entertainment. HDTV receiver prices are beginning to decline now.

Ya know, in this new millennium, with HDTV, cellular telephones, Roombas and Scoobas, personal computers, it just doesn't make sense to keep the morse code requirement for an amateur radio activity. I'm glad the FCC is finally bringing the US amateur radio regulations somewhat into the 2000s (well, at least close to it).

I wonder how long "The Sound of Music" transmission time would be if done in morse code? 200 days? 20 years? :-)

It's inaccurate. You did not interrogate Google correctly, and so the number you gave is much lower than the actual number.

If you can't be accurate, why should anyone trust you?

Nope.

I'm saying you are giving a number that is very inaccurate. 6,191 is a lot less than 10,993.

Seeing your following post explaining the mixup in attributes, I'll toss a thing or two in here in response... :-)

The on-air get-together of morsemen was reported in here in some detail and Cecil really did do his thunderstorm thing.
Considering Cecil's method of antenna matching...open-wire feedline stubs switched in by knife switches...it is one heckuva dangerous exercise to peak his wire antenna response!

I admire Cecil Moore for his free-thinking ability...plus his nifty Harley-Davidson motorcycle (called a "hog" among motor afficionados). :-) He moved back to Texas to take care of his ailing parents, something I had in common with him and don't wish that on anyone.

Not all of the correspondents in here are in retirement!
Most of the adamant morsemen seem to be, though, but Jimmie Noserve "is not." Since only a select few of his "inner circle" of (morsemen) friends seem to know what he does and where so "N2EY" isn't yet retired...but he sounds like he is in his 80s or 90s, though.

The Prussian pedant ("K8MN") has his government pension checks and as a retiree of the federal government it would probably not be from the SS. He only ACTS like he was in the SS. :-)

>You think anyone, but another one, can get along with any one of them?

I don't think a chronological contemporary can "get along" with them unless they are part of the wish-fulfillment tribe called morsemen. They are SET in their ways, unable to adapt, yet all want to be "leaders" or, at the very least, "respected" for their unfailing devotion to old, old standards and practices in a radio hobby.

Most won't acknowledge that amateur radio IS a hobby... those are off into their own wish-fulfillment dreams of honor, glory, majesty, and "service to their country" by having that particular hobby. Sheesh.

Now there's nothing at all wrong with having a fascinating hobby. Amateur radio IS a fascinating hobby. It can be fun, it can be a recreation. Some folk in here let it dominate their life and THAT gets them off into some fantasies of their own. Not a good thing. For them or the ones they are around. Especially so if their whole being in the hobby are dominated by a self-styled few leaders up in the NE USA. The STRICT ordering of jargon and protocol and 'We' do things 'differently' (as in the standards of over a half century ago) gets a bit annoying to technology liberals. Radio itself is only 110 years old and is constantly changing. To be stuck in the beginning middle of that technology lifespan (never to change) seems an absurd ultra-conservative fixation with old technology.

It's worse with the fixation towards on-off keyed CW. Morse code was first used in 1844...BEFORE radio existed as a communications medium. Why in hell a 162-year-old mode "must" be a "qualifier" for an amateur radio license is ludicrous. That "need" to preserve a truly archaic mode HAS to be the result of intense mental conditioning (commonly called brainwashing) by the you-know-who organization (the main 'news' source for USA amateur radio).

On the other hand, the strict adherence to standards and protocol of olden times MAY be satisfactory for all those who have difficulty with adaptation to newer technology. That adherence can be a comfort, a psychological survival factor perhaps, but it doesn't alleviate their inability to adapt. Trying to get everyone else to conform to THEIR beloved adherence to old standards and practices is very, very wrong and also very selfish of them.

Looks as if Hal is going to have to do something about those after midnight phone calls.

I want to stay tuned to find out what.

No, don't bother...he couldn't find anything on ByteBrothers

This is entirely expected. With the codeless Tech license in 92 the de-facto entry-level license became the Tech. Your observations are right on.

Yes, at some point I think that steep drop will begin to level off. Much

I might be able to come up with a guess, but I don't know what it means, Len.

Ask your buddie, Jimmie Miccolis.

My "buddie"? I consider Jim as a buddy or a friend, but I didn't ask him. He didn't post the term several times. You did.

I'm quite aware of older computer-modem comms. I'm not familiar with the term you're using. Is it something someone said to you one or more

Nope, I think I had one with my call. I switched to an "anon" after too much unwarranted attention was being paid to where my residence was by some of the bad elements on RRAP. Then Hans asked me to give up Billy, and I did. I selected a screen name with "ham" in the title just for fun.

Now, Jim, would you mind tallying up all of your postings under all of your screen names?

Betcha can't.

So why should anyone trust anything you say when you run around opinion: you can't be trusted. ;^)

All this stuff about dumbing down America is garbage. This lady works for the CDC and has this kind of attitude? Thats scary. By the same token, I guess a physician is less of a doctor, is 'dumb' because he uses an MRI to make a diagnosis rather than cutting someone open for exploratory surgery.
Telegraphy (in its simplest form, smoke signals) has been around for thousands of years, keys for a bit over 200. Its time to move on people.
CW is a nice skill to have, as are woodworking, horseback riding and knitting. But not one of them is relevant to life in the 21st century. not even a little bit. If everyone with those abilities fell off the planet right now, the world would hardly notice the loss. Thats just the way it is. Amatuer Radio operators can be innovators that move along with the times and embrace new opportunities (as we have done for the most part) or we can keep crying about how things were in the good old days and become (extinct) dinosaurs.
Now if you will excuse me I need to start studying for my General.

Very enjoyable! It was an unusual work week. Was there any rationale for that?

Also, your lady friend Ada was kinda cute, did some lucky soldier run

Rules:

1) Predict amount of change in ARS numbers between the IMPLEMENTATION date of the R&O for elimination of code testing and one year from that date.
2) Calculation of the number of licenses will be done by N2EY under the same principals that he uses now to calculate the number of licenses.
3) You must select whole numbers for your percentage.
4) You may select positive or negative percentages.
5) You may select a range but that range may not exceed a total of 4%.
Note that your average will be used to determine who is closest. If the actual change is outside the range of everyone's guesses then the person whose limit is closest will be the winner.
6) You must submit your guess no later than six months after the
IMPLEMENTATION date of the R&O.

Anyone else? Note if your guess doesn't show up on the list within a week, it may mean that my ISP is blocking it or that you are on my blocked senders list. You may still participate but you will have to have your guess submitted by someone who is not blocked.

Guesses submitted:

N3KIP: 2% more to 6% more
KH6O: 6% more to 10% more <--- Added 12/30/06, changed to per KH6O to Good one Dave. When you start "studying" for your general you will see how dumbed down and simple it is and you might marvel at why the QPC would have ever even bothered to commit such a "test" to publication. It may also occur to you that, as the the Geico commercial says, it is so easy a caveman could do it. Actually I would move back perhaps 25 millions earlier in the evolutionary cycle and say it is so easy, even a monkey could do it.

And monkeys it will be.

Guess? No. Logic? Yes.

There will be a lag in new membership, perhaps numbers will begin a slow growth--perhaps a rapid jump then a slowing off--hard to tell ...

Then, all of a sudden, some magazine, or some group like MENSA will pick it up, or the college crowd will accept it as "being hip", etc., etc., anyway, it will catch on--trendy to be a ham. There will be some new technology which finally begins to trickle into amateur radio and new designs in the stagnated equipment; then all of a sudden it will spring full-blown into "being vogue."

Who knows how, when or where--the important thing is the door now has been breached. The dead hams fingers have been torn from their death grips on the hobby. Now, IT CAN HAPPEN!

We all can help, but who can say who will finally be recognized as the trigger ...

It was part of a private document that came about after experimenting with restoring a bunch of digitized color slides (roughly 600) using the Adobe photo program back in 2000.
Over 500 slides got restored and emulsion reticulation erased.
Once that was done, the explanations for the photos suggested the photo essay. The final digitized slides were transferred to a CD for safekeeping. Note: Not even Kodachrome will last 40+ years without change...

The original essay was 30 pages and several copies were printed out on inkjet, given out. I edited it down to 20 pages for electronic distribution. Since Hal's website is up the coast towards Santa Barbara and was open for submission of material, I sent it up there.

BTW, I got exactly nothing for all that work. It was a "labor of love" (so stated by a retired civilian engineer who worked for the Army there when I was in the Company) and a place where I spent three years of my life doing things in radio that were unique to just about everyone in this newsgroup. :-) melted and that was that. :-) [only her eyes remained true...]

Everyone doing the guessing is working with OLD paradigms.
There's NEVER been a time when there was NO code test, at least since 1934. Nobody's been exposed to that kind of environment/situation...all they've got is the old times when there was ALWAYS a code test.

>Then, all of a sudden, some magazine, or some group like MENSA will pick >it up, or the college crowd will accept it as "being hip", etc., etc.,

That's entirely possible but I'd say Unlikely with a capital U. Just too many old farts ready to jump in with the standard "they 'know' what is good for ham radio!" AS IF. :-) [if they 'already knew' why didn't they DO something about it?]

But, but, but, the NEW DESIGNS in "stagnated equipment" have ALREADY HAPPENED, beginning between 30 and 20 years ago. ALL by manufacturers, generally off-shore...by Yaesu, Kenwood, Icom, JRC. Ten-Tec is struggling to stay in the market (they are a USA company) but isn't achieving market dominance at all. Note: W1AW uses Harris transmitters (a pro user market dominant company).

All them handheld VHF and above radios for the US ham market were pioneered for commercial and military users, not hams. [this newsgroup doesn't have regulars who bother with the world above 30 MHz so they are unfamiliar with it] [maybe Hans Brakob does...but Hans hasn't been around much in the last year]

>Who knows how, when or where--the important thing is the door now has >been breached. The dead hams fingers have been torn from their death >grips on the hobby. Now, IT CAN HAPPEN!

I'll go with that...but it's been a bit late. When one American in three had a cellphone subscription (two years ago according to the Bureau of Census) it is UNlikely that morsemanship on HF to "talk to foreign lands" is going to be some catchy, with-it motivation. Ordinary folk can just dial direct on the telephone system at lesser cost than paying $2K for a "free" ham station.

>We all can help, but who can say who will finally be recognized as the >trigger ...

An ACTOR could begin the publicity. Imagine...a HAM ACTOR!
I can see the ARRL news headlines now...<BSEG>

Of course, the L.A. area is rather FULL of "ham actors" who only need AMPAS and SAG "licenses" (actually registry) to do their "ham" thing. :-)

He was just cribbing stuff from ARRL publications. <shrug>

Miccolis wasn't even born until about a decade AFTER WW2 ended. His source of information is only from ARRL.
Sure as heck can't be from "personal experience." :-) Ha! He will mumble something about "...I don't have any other screen names..." and DENY ever using any. We know better and will have to be Quitefine with that...

"discusting"????
"you're" instead of "your" sorry ass??
"peice" in lieu of "piece"?

Which part of third grade did you miss?
I posted to no "scaner" forum. Is there such a beast?

Even Trailer Trash know how to spell "fuckin'" idiots. Use 'fucking' or 'fuckin', there is no E in the word.
But again, what do no-code scanner freaks know about spelling other than to sound it out around two already badly decayed teeth? You cain't hep it iffin' yer mommy and yer daddy were brother and sister.

keep hidden in your posterior?
Dont chew your fingernails, Good Buddy.

Put a number and time frame to your "logic". If you can't then it's still a guess just like all of ours. For the pool that I'm doing, the time frame is fixed at one year from the implementation date.

He did. Of coutse he was being a devil's advocate, but he was indeed the one to suggest this.

I posted only to rec.radio.amateur.policy not to all the groups that have been listed. Why have you changed that just to issue an insult? However, the killfile is useful in cases like this.

Yet none of you have actually shown the posting where I allegedly did this.

That's because you are mistaken.

People sometimes "remember" things that did not happen.

Bogart never says "Play it again, Sam" in "Casablanca", yet that misquote became so popular that it became the title of another film.

If you could show where I supposedly came up with - originated - a proposal for a no-test amateur service, you might be able to prove me to be mistaken.

But so far you've not been able to do that, even though all my posts are in Google, waiting for you.

That's because you are mistaken. Or maybe even trying to deceive.

And you should get your story straight, too. Is it a "no-test" amateur radio service, or "No Test International"? The claims wander around.

The thing is Len, you don't need a licence to comment on the subject, but if you are that interested then why don't you get one? There's no reason you couldn't get an Extra licence now, so why not do it?

I don't have to point out to you that I am UN-politically correct, indeed, I take great pride in being so ...

So, I am going to lay it on you straight. Because you are here in a male dominated HOBBY--from the get-go, I accept you are probably a bit "taller" than most women you stand next to. I'd also suspect you capable of a bit more logic than most women I have ever run across, my present XYL excluded.

What I have presented to you IS LOGIC. Anything more would be "just a guess." Fools make guesses when logic avails them ...

This is just a means to "belittle" non-CW licensees, I'd expect more from you--stand away from the "good 'ole boys", now is your chance to show what metal you are made of ... history is watching.

Please pay close attention to what is occurring here. The good 'ole boys are about their business as usual, no change. Even, at this point, the FCC has had to throw it "in their face" that the ploy of using CW to limit licensees will NO longer be permitted.

Now these hams, who's time has and gone, keep right up with the insanity--like some alcoholic so addicted to bad behavior, they have become 'addicted' and can no longer help themselves. These men and women now need to be seen for what they are. If they hold offices in amateur institutions or clubs, they need to removed and replaced. They need to be taken to task, their little control games need to be stopped. They need to be "put on a shelf, and put away from harming the hobby."

Don't be one of them ...

Warmest regards,
JS

No, Brian, you are not anonymous. Anyone who's been here a year or so will know that. For those short-timers, your call is N 0 I M D (using spaces to make it clearer to the hate-filled near-sighted twits).

Major Dud is running out of "reasons" for personally insulting others so he has resorted to his old, false, outdated "SIGNING" charge.

A written communications medium such as on Usenet already IDs the user in the header information. Robesin doesn't understand any of that...he still thinks he is in some kind of cue-so on the radio and the "signing" must be the callsign.
Poor feller doesn't understand the difference between Usenet over the Internet and amateur radio parlance-protocol-procedure.

Sigh...there's no end to the behavior of Robesin in sight and 2007 will open up just another barrage of hate-filled, frustrated insults from Him. Unless he gets a job in another hospital to end his "vacation." :-)

Best regards,

It is not "logic" when it depends on other, unpredictable factors to cause the growth. If it it not predictable, it is not yet logic. Logic depends on the known to project the future. I accept that these are all just guesses. We are indulging in some idle speculation.

It is in no way intended to "belittle" the non-CW licensees. One of the arguments was that the CW test requirement kept a significant number of people out of ham radio. Such statements were made by a wide variety of people included some who were code tested. Others (including myself) believe that there are not large numbers of people waiting in the wings to enter ham radio (upgrade yes, enter no). Well the CW test requirement is gone. It is perfectly logical to see if it has a significant effect on amateur radio growth.

The intent of this is to get people to pay attention to the growth or lack thereof for the very reason that "history is watching". The effect of this change could be significant in shaping future regulatory changes. It would be foolish for people and organizations not to watch for the effect.

1. The CW testing was NEVER intended to limit the number of licensees no matter what some of the hams said.
2. The CW testing was NEVER intended to be a lid filter no matter what some of the hams said.
3. The CW testing was NEVER intended to be a right of passage no matter what some of the hams said.
4. It was intended to test for a knowledge that was deemed reasonable for every ham to have. I.e. it was one of the basics of amateur radio nothing more and nothing less. While I believe it is still one of the basics and should be tested for, the FCC has deemed it otherwise.

Items 1 thru 3 were false arguments and were just as harmful to the amateur radio community as the false used by those who wished to eliminate the test (i.e. too hard for otherwise qualified individuals was bogus).

Well all the hams I know are contacting every Tech they know inside and outside of the club and telling them about the change and providing them with the info on test sessions available in the area so they can get ready and upgrade as soon as possible. I personally know that some of these hams provding this info on the change were violently opposed to dropping the code test requirement. They've moved beyond that and moved to the "Elmer" mode.

I've got a double size team of VEs who have committed to show up for the test sessions for the next few months in case we get an influx of new and upgrading applicants.

Rules:

1) Predict amount of change in ARS numbers between the IMPLEMENTATION
date of the R&O for elimination of code testing and one year from that date.
2) Calculation of the number of licenses will be done by N2EY under the same principals that he uses now to calculate the number of licenses.
3) You must select whole numbers for your percentage.
4) You may select positive or negative percentages.
5) You may select a range but that range may not exceed a total of 4%.
Note that your average will be used to determine who is closest. If the actual change is outside the range of everyone's guesses then the person whose limit is closest will be the winner.
6) You must submit your guess no later than six months after the
IMPLEMENTATION date of the R&O.

Anyone else? Note if your guess doesn't show up on the list within a week, it may mean that my ISP is blocking it or that you are on my blocked senders list. You may still participate but you will have to have your guess submitted by someone who is not blocked.

Guesses submitted:

N8UZE: 1% less to 1% more
N2EY: 1% more to 2% more
KH6HZ: 1% less to 0% change
N3KIP: 2% more to 6% more
KH6O: 6% more to 10% more KK6J: 12% more to 14% more
KC2HMZ: 5% more <--- Added 12/31/06

Sigh...Alun, this whole "charge" of "PROMISING to get an extra out of the box" dates back six years and is, itself, a FALSE charge of "impropriety." Miccolis has the "polite insult" tactic of taking things out of context, then fabricating some kind of "indignation" or even "outrage" at such alleged perfidy.
:-)

SIX YEARS AGO I wrote what amounts to a throw-away comment as part of a longer message and Miccolis apparently got hit in his mental eye and remembered it. He then manufactured a FALSE charge of my "not keeping promises."

Decades ago I promised myself to never get married again.
Then I re-connected with my high-school sweetheart and "broke" my "promise."

COULD I get an extra class amateur license now? Yes, I COULD. But I am NOT promising to do so. I never promised to do so six years ago...despite what Miccolis "charges."

Radio-electronics is - to me - a totally fascinating part of still-advancing technology. So much so that I changed my life career goals from being an illustrator-artist to electronic engineering.
I've never regretted that despite having an aptitude and some skill and experience in professional illustration before my military service. There is no visible end to changes possible or forthcoming in radio-electronics (or electronics-radio) and it is fun to see it all evolve, grow, become a part of our lives. I look forward every month to see what is new, exciting, indeed revolutionary in electronics technology described in the many trade magazines I receive.

Do I "need" an amateur radio license? Personally speaking, NO.
But, it might be fun...or it might not...depending who there is to communicate with and how to communicate. Having gotten into HF radio communications over a half century ago (on a more massive scale than most amateurs in this group experienced),
I have absolutely NO desire to do, learn (once again), or bother with on-off keying CW just on the HF bands. If one has spent three years of their life keeping 40+ HF transmitters running 24/7 on long-distance (over 2000 miles) radio circuits, the thought of collecting 10, 100, or a 1000 "DX" contacts (each one a sporadic, minimal exchange of information) just for the act of collecting them is a non-starter to me.

Do I "need" some fancy certificates framed and hung on the wall or a federally-authorized operator license station callsign so that I can put that next to my name (as if it were a PhD or similar)?
No. I have no use for Titles and the only thing on my home office wall is paint. [one 13-foot long wall is mostly bookshelves which are fairly well filled] One of the LAST things I need is some certificate announcing "expertise" in a manual skill that was already mature before the turn of the century befoe the latest one. My wife has two post-graduate degrees which makes her two up on mine, yet neither one of us makes a big thing of a college diploma. [hers are in storage up north, for example]

Some who are skilled in an archaic form of "communications" keep up the pretense of their being "superior" to others. That's just a pretense fueled by an ego...and worse considering that the old license class standards were set by even older egos brought about when such OOK CW standards were a norm in old radio communications. That time is past but the old standards are still triumphed by those who've gotten enormous emotional sustenance from the Titles they thus obtained.

I'm not about to give up my time to feed those egos nor agree to maintain the federal welfare that kept those egos fed.

Modernization in ALL communications standards and practices has been happening...and the hobby of amateur radio has lagged behind the rest of the radio world. There's finally some hope of ending the federal welfare of egos who think that OOK CW is the end-all, be-all of radio and thus some sort of God-given "superiority" over mere mortals. I am secure in what I know and do, do not need fancy titles or certificates or awards to stoke my ego. If something new happens in electronics I take the trouble to find out more about it, to continue a lifelong learning endeavor that is itself most fascinating. I don't bother with trying to be a "champion" of some skill that was already old when I was born and see little use for such skill now.

Now, all that said, amateur radio MIGHT be a fun thing for me to do, something to ADD to the many means of communication I already have. I first communicated on radio over a half century ago and have since done so from ground, from the air (at the controls of an airplane), and from the sea (okay, a harbor on the Pacific shore).
I once sent commands to a station ON the moon and received a reply that such commands were accepted.
I don't need a radio or a hobby license just to show that I can use a radio or communicate by radio...nor do I need a lot of wallpaper to "prove" such communications. I'm one of the very few in here who has the technological smarts and experience to be able to cobble together
a "radio" from an amorphous collection of components, often cited as the "reason" simple comms such as CW
"is needed for its simplicity." I don't bother trying that since it is much better to design-build something better, something more state-of-the-art than the pipe-dream stuff spouted in this newsgroup in the past by morse mavens.

My advocacy in here has been to end the morse code test for an amateur radio license. It has never been one of getting my own amateur license. Given that I've read just about all the propaganda issued by the ARRL on their idea of What Is Best For Amateurs, I'm rather immune to their "reasons." If you have some NEW reasons to get an amateur radio license, I'll listen. Old reasons haven't worked so far.

Logic guides the use of "probability and statistics" and this is what we are dealing with here. Although that law contains unknowns and variables, at least the general direction can be logically deduced, the pitfalls cited, the games recorded, the evil personalities noted--it is as I originally stated--I stand behind that 100%--logic suggest EXACTLY what I stated.

You are NOT indulging in idle speculation. Like a chronic abuser or wife beater, you hide in the shadows, you have denied your crimes, carefully cloaking them in methods, maneuvers and actions which can "argued" to be of a different nature--however, the bruises are noticeable! You belittle NON-CW hams in the subtle, sneaky, perverse, under-handed and imbecilic ways of human trash ...

Act like an adult and treat those who deserve it as such. I know the temptation is great to do otherwise--all these children running about can distract one here in the r.r.a groups ...

Without a doubt, the CW element HAS made it just difficult enough that others choose other hobbies. ONLY a fool would claim the contrary--think before you describe yourself as a fool ...

Changes will happen ... it is only a matter of time and people finding out the old "King of the Hill" bunch are gone, their bite is no more, those are only the false teeth of the old invalids you see before you "watch dogging" the gates of ham radio ...

Yes. Many have given up on the imbecilic old hams guarding the gates of amateur radio. We need to find them and invite them back--the remaining chicken banders need informing ... there would be no HISTORY without people, perhaps I should have said "sane people are watching."

While logic uses probability and statistics, you have presented exactly none. You cannot assign a probability value to the other factors that you name. Therefore they are not usable in logic.

You are wrong. There were several code-tested hams who predicted huge growth in amateur radio due to eliminating the requirement. As I said before, it behooves us to watch the numbers and see if it works. To ignore it is to attempt to shape the future with insufficient data.

I am simply trying to get a handle on the actual numbers of people that would have chosen other hobbies because of the code. And have everyone, those who predict little or no affect and those who predict a lot of effect to pay attention to what actually happens. If people have fun in a pool, they will pay attention to the numbers.

I'd be ecstatic if we had a huge growth. However, I happen to think that is unrealistic since most people I know outside of ham radio hardly know it even exists let alone the requirements to participate.

Why are you so convinced that there are significant numbers of such people? Very few people that I know fall into this category. As stated before, our club members and others I know are very busy spreading the word on the change regardless of whether they agree with it.

Why do you seem convinced that there are significant numbers of oldsters trying to "guard the gates"? It is certainly inconsistent with my experience. All I've seen are a limited handful. They've had no success since there are so many other good oldsters out there helping out.

Why are you being derogatory towards those who operate Citizen's Band? I know many nice people who operate CB. My neighbor for one. So far he has evinced no interest in ham radio even though we've demonstrated amateur radio to him. He's quite happy with his circle of friends on CB and has no interest in going further. Since he's shown no interest, we never got around to discussing the requirements.

Okay, John, be prepared to be in Dee's "killfile." She doesn't care for those who are Un-politically correct.

This "pool" is basically some nattering among the morse mavens and/or a means of making nice-nice with chatty messaging on a subject nobody can accurately predict. I think it's supposed to be like the hostess at a party being very busy with nagging everyone to have a good time. :-)

>This is just a means to "belittle" non-CW licensees, I'd expect more >from you--stand away from the "good 'ole boys", now is your chance to

This "pool" IS a means to belittle non-coders. Look at the past in here: Dee is an avowed OOK CW morse-person. She isn't about to suddenly embrace a landmark change in elimination of the code test with enthusiasm.

>Please pay close attention to what is occurring here. The good 'ole Absolutely. :-(

THAT ain't gonna happen, John.

Those mentally-conditioned morse mavens "know what is best for ham radio" and aren't going to be put away without an enormous fight to retain their power. Worse yet, they have supporters who are as mentally-conditioned and will fight with them. [they also know "what is best" (they say)]

Good grief, I see a "Sunni v. Shiite" continuing "battle" for the future in US amateur radio. Or make it the Catholics v. Protestants in Northern Ireland. Constant fight-fight-fight over "supremacy." Idiotic.

>Don't be one of them ...

She will be...and that's no guess or logic. Dee knows what is best for amateur radio. Anything new or revolutionary gets placed in her killfile where she won't see it...after her trying to spank the "kiddies" who dare speak against her. :-(

Len, Len, Len. Most hams are the slowest dimwits I have ever had the misfortune to participate with. Now don't get me wrong, mixed up in their senseless mass are a few sheer geniuses, but the ratio is about (100 dummies):(1 bright) and just to find sane hams one has to cope with the ratio of (10 insane):(1 sane).

But then, you already knew that ...

Warmest regards,

Again they aren't here. Perhaps they are local to your area. The propagation being what it is at the bottom of the sunspot cycle, the CB band is mostly local communications at the moment.

Have you noticed though that there are only a handful of people in the newsgroups, especially in this one? They repeate the same things over and over. And yes I repeat mine too. The limited number of people that hang out here is hardly a representative example.

And if you will notice I never subscribed to the arguments of most of those who post here. I've never believed it code testing was supposed to be any kind of limiter, lid filter, or rite of passage. I also notice that you cut those sections of my posts referring to the fact that I believe those arguments to be invalid and harmful to amateur radio just as I believe the argument that many people are unable to learn code is invalid and harmful.

In additon, I have never made any derogatory comments about people on the Citizen's Band. You must be confusing me with someone else. Like any other group, there are good people and bad people.

Like I said, there is a wide range of people in CB and I've never referred to them by any of the multitude of derogatory names that people have come up with.

Like I said, "Try to get out more."

I live at a major trucking hub, Stockton, CA--the anus of the world. Sacramento, the capital, is but a scant 40 miles on either hwy 99 or hwy 5. It is truckers who still influence this being a "CB hotspot." I have my 10M rig always setting on CH. 17--27.165Mhz. While CH. 19 to CH. 21 (27.185Mhz-27.215Mhz) are usually considered the "truckers channels", here it is CH. 17 or you talk to yourself.

As the mooseluums take over trucking, buying up all the small trucking companies, I notice their numbers are declining--truckers with CB's/10M equipment, still much, much more action there than the ham bands--especially local traffic.

Frankly, I wonder if most here don't "live in another world?" Of course, I do--living here. Don't worry though, for me, next year I plan on leaving california. The loonies here can have it ...

Well, I personally know such an "RF scientist" who, when I emailed him about element 1 going away, expressed interest in getting a ham license. About 10 years ago he ran a test lab that tested HDTV broadcast methods. Gave him a web site of practice tests, so he'd know ham radio specific regulations (what bands, power limits and such that cannot be derived from RF theory) and know what to expect when he does take the tests. But he's not a young guy.

The ARRL ought to place a few advertisements in the various RF trade journals, to get the word out.

Everybody answered his question...looks like he got the right newsgroup.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA - San Diego Zoo officials said they can't explain how an 800-pound gorilla with shaved legs escaped from his enclosure, injuring four people before he was shot to death. Police evacuated an estimated 300 people from the zoo compound Thursday and killed Magilla Gorilla, a 13-year-old male western lowland gorilla, after he charged at officers. Zoo workers armed with tranquilizer guns had pursued the animal through the forested jungles of the Wilds of Africa exhibit for about 40 minutes, but could not gain a clear shot, officials said. "He tried to charge two of our officers, so we had to shoot it," Deputy Police Chief Richard Beater said. "You can imagine the pandemonium we had out here when he got loose. We felt terrible we had to put this animal down." The injured included a mother and her toddler son. Davey Crockett, 3, was in fair condition at San Diego General Hospital with multiple bites to his head and chest. His mother, Tammy Faye Baker, 26, who was bitten on the legs, and Paris Hilton, who suffered arm injuries, were treated at hospitals and released. "I was like, this is not happening, this is so unreal, cause he just came out of nowhere," Tammy Faye said Friday on NBC's Today show. "I'm watching this gorilla. He has my son in his mouth, he's attacking little Davey, and I tried to help him and there wasn't really anything that I could do. He slings me back across the concrete area where we are. So it was really scary." Magilla Gorilla was in the award-winning gorilla-conservation area where he had access to computers that he used to write messages to antagonize rec.bicycles.racing newsgroup readers. Before the attack some youths (i.e., Carl Sundquist, et. al.) had reportedly teased Magilla shortly before the incident.

Well I'd suggest posing the proposal to the ARRL and suggest to them to fund
it by having a special drive rather like what they do for the Spectrum Defense Fund. It's doubtful that they have sufficient unallocated dollars in the current budget to place these ads.

Suggesting it here in rrap isn't going to do a thing.

I can't google up something which has been deleted, such as your claim that Veteran's always have their hands out.

Really, know about spread spectrum? Know anyone to give you some frequency ring keys? Yanno, there be pirates in those waters bucko!
Perhaps you have noticed a bit more background noise ... ever see any "strange activity" there, or hear conversations which seem to be spoken in code? Hear strangely modulated signals?

There ya go! Right close to the real problem now, aren't we. Let me be blunt--just to make the point hit home ... who gives a damn what Dee wants? Don't hold yer breath ...

Because in software engineering the ratios are about backwards to those found in "amateur radio", because in colleges the ratio is about backwards to those found in amateur radio ... as a matter of fact, among all technical minded people that ratio is about backwards to what is found here--does that provide a clue to what is wrong here? You beginning to see the matrix?

However, got some damn good brass pounders here! They probably can play a musical instrument too! Well, at least a kazoo. <grin>

Perhaps - if the person has a google account. But I have not done that.
All my old rrap postings are intact in the archives.

And a person cannot delete the postings of another. So if A post something, and A is quoted by B, the quote will still show up in B's posting even if A deletes his post.

How can you be sure?

Perhaps you did not correctly remember what was actually written.

Your memory of postings here has been proved to be selective and inaccurate.

For example, recently you made some significant mistakes in your account of FDR's treatment of veterans during the Great Depression.

Shall I repost those mistakes of yours and the corrections?

That is correct. The truth is the truth, regardless of how many deny it.

Yep. You're one of them. Deal with it.

At least that many.

Maybe. I wrote "maybe even trying to deceive".
